Meet Elba Olivero, DDS

Dentist at Eastern Shore Dental Care

What brought you to ESDC? Kent Island is very special. The area is beautiful and the people are friendly. The location, patients and staff at ESDC make it a great place to work.

What does ESDC do best? ESDC is focused on patient comfort and convenience. We take pride in providing patient-centric care.

What skill/trait do you admire the most about one of your Dental Associates? Dr. Brotz has the ability to relate and talk to anyone. She instantly connects with patients and reviews their dental needs effectively.

What would you say is your dental philosophy? I'm a conservative dentist who advocates for preventative dentistry. I like to address teeth before they get to the point of causing pain.

What is your dental specialty(s)? I love Endodontics aka root canals. Every tooth and root canal is different, so it keeps things interesting. Root canals are a great procedure to alleviate a patient's pain and save their teeth.

When someone finds out you're a dentist, what is the #1 question they always ask you? "Really? How old are you?"

Describe your new patient examination style/priorities? I like to focus on the patient's immediate concerns. It's important to incorporate what's bothering the patient into their treatment plan. My main goal is to alleviate their pain and get rid of any infection. Next, I would remove any active decay. Once the mouth is healthy, we can address any esthetic concerns the patient may have.

If you could preach only one thing to all of your patients what would it be? Dental treatment will never cost less or hurt less than it does right now. Fear of the dentist is real. It costs nothing to meet us and take a tour. However, putting off dental treatment will result in bigger problems that require more dental visits and cost more money.

THE NINETEENTH AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION STATING

“THE RIGHT OF CITIZENS OF THE
UNITED STATES TO VOTE SHALL NOT BE DENIED OR ABRIDGED BY THE UNITED STATES OR BY ANY STATE ON ACCOUNT OF SEX”

What’s Up? Media started making plans in May 2019 for this milestone and formed a nonprofit organization called Year of the Woman. Our purpose is to celebrate, educate, encourage, and inspire us all to use the power of our single vote that each of us won 100 years ago! Encouraging discussions of “What’s Next” are also in our plans for 2020.

How will we do this? What’s Up? Media will feature an ongoing series of articles about the history of the Suffrage Movement as well as discussions of how we have changed during the last 100 years and what the future holds. In January, we are kicking off our year-long series of events, education, speakers, and film series. You will see 55 banners hanging on the light poles along West Street and throughout downtown Annapolis declaring the Year of the Woman. These will be displayed again in August. On the Eastern Shore, you will see more banners and a travelling set of posters telling some of the stories of suffrage and declaring the Year of the Woman. We are also planning events and talks at the soon-to-be opened Maryland Museum of Women’s History at Bloomfield Manor in Centreville—the brainchild of Mary Margaret Revell Goodwin.

Also in the works, is an education contest with Anne Arundel County Public Schools, for which prized will be awarded in March at an event to be held at the Banneker-Douglass Museum. The Anne Arundel Public Library system has organized a year-long book club series for both adults and teens. And there will be many other events, discussions, and films celebrating the Year of the Woman. If you know of any events celebrating this milestone anniversary, let us know and we will help promote them. Watch for them in our publications and at www.yearofthewoman.net. Would you like to join us? Email me at veronica@whatsupmag.com.

FROM ABAGAIL ADAMS TO HER SISTER

Welcome to 2020 and what a year it looks to be! Not only is it a presidential election year, but in December our Governor declared 2020 to be the Year of the Woman. He announced this in honor of 100 years of suffrage, or women having finally won the right to vote in August of 1920. It is ironic that although, today, Maryland is a more progressive state, we chose not to ratify the 19th amendment until May 29, 1941—nearly 21 years after most other U.S. states. Nevertheless, we are proudly honoring this hard-fought accomplishment of determined women and men from 100 years ago.

← Doc's Downtown Grille Donates to TCCAC

Doc's Downtown Grille donated $850 to Talbot County Children's Advocacy Center (TCCAC) in Easton through Talbot Community Connections. To raise the money, the Easton-based restaurant held a guest bartending event and donated a portion of the proceeds. TCCAC provides support and assistance to children in the Mid-Shore region who are victims of sexual and physical abuse. The donation will benefit TCCAC's services, including forensic medical examinations. TCCAC is located within University of Maryland Shore Medical Center at Easton and is supported by Talbot Community Connections. To donate to TCCAC, visit talbotcommunityconnections.org.

CAMPBELL'S LANE FARM DONATES $4,100 TO THE MARYLAND FOOD BANK

Campbell's Lane Farm, located in Preston, donated $4,100 to the Maryland Food Bank of the Eastern Shore in October. Funds were raised at Campbell's Lane Farm's first community fundraiser, a mystery dinner theater, which attracted more than 150 guests. According to Jennifer Small, the regional programs director of the Maryland Food Bank Eastern Shore Branch, the $4,100 contribution can provide 12,300 meals to families and individuals in need. The Maryland Food Bank Eastern Shore Branch distributes food to eight counties: Caroline, Dorchester, Kent, Queen Anne's, Somerset, Talbot, Wicomico, and Worcester.

The Talbot County government recognized county employees' years of service with an awards ceremony in October. Held at the Talbot County Free Library in Easton, the Talbot County Council, county department heads, and friends and family came together to honor 41 employees for their many years of service, ranging from five to 35 years. Talbot County Council President Corey Pack commented, "Opportunities are too few and far between to acknowledge your efforts and hard work. We are so pleased to be able to have you step up and be recognized today. To put it simply, we applaud you and your service."

American Nurse Credentialing Center Awards Magnet Recognition to UM SRH Hospitals ↓

Three of UM Shore Regional Health's three hospitals—Shore Medical Centers at Chestertown, Dorchester, and Easton—were honored with the American Nurse Credentialing Center (ANCC) Magnet Recognition. The ANCC Magnet Recognition Program credential is granted to exceptional health care organizations that meet specific guidelines and standards set by ANCC. To earn this honor, organizations must meet standards in quality patient care, excellence in nursing, and innovations in professional nursing practice. Shore Medical Center locations at Chestertown, Dorchester, and Easton are three of only eight hospitals in Maryland with a Magnet designation.

WYE RIVER UPPER SCHOOL STUDENTS COMPETE IN ANNUAL CARDBOARD BOAT REGATTA

Students from Wye River Upper School in Centreville competed in Washington College's annual Cardboard Boat Regatta in September. Wye River had two teams of students that were led by school educator Karen Gilbert. The competition consisted of students building boats made of corrugated cardboard in the style of a vessel that has traditionally traveled the Chesapeake Bay. One group of students created a log canoe, while the other designed a schooner. Judges awarded Wye River students with the Linda Greenlaw Award for Team Spirit for their positive outlook and peer collaboration.

Abby Blanchard

Queen Anne's County High School
Soccer, Basketball, Tennis

By Tom Worgo

By the time Queen Anne's County High School senior and three-sport standout Abby Blanchard turned 11, she had already lived and played soccer in three countries. But, it was in soccer-crazed England that the sport became Blanchard's obsession, and she played there for four years.

"I had soccer practice every day," Blanchard explains. "It was just a part of everyday life. We just went out and kicked the ball around all the time. Soccer over there is like football over here. It just made me more passionate about the sport at a younger age."

Blanchard had an opportunity to revisit her fond soccer memories when her club team, the Shore Football Club, went to England for a tournament this past summer.

"I really like the atmosphere over there," says Blanchard, who competes year-round for Shore and also played four years in Germany in her younger days before moving to England. "It's just soccer, soccer, soccer. We were outside of London and there were three different stadiums we could play in."

When Blanchard first came to the United States, she was surprised that same level of intensity didn't exist here.

"I had to hide it more," she says of her passion for soccer. "Over in England, I could just talk to anyone about it. Over here, the normal conversation would be about baseball or football. It definitely wasn't about soccer. I wouldn't say I talked about it a lot."

She will attend McDaniel College and major in business with a minor in international studies. But Blanchard still has a fondness for Europe, and she wants to study abroad. One option is McDaniel's sister school in Budapest, Hungary.

"They offer programs such as literacy memory, food history, and programs centered around culture in central Europe," says Blanchard, who carries a 4.0 grade-point average. "I would just like to study different cultures."

Germany, England, and France are the countries that most interest her.

"I really want to get a job overseas," she says. "I just want something where I would be traveling."

Shore Football Club Coach Mike Leach says Blanchard's playing soccer overseas has put her way ahead of other players in high school.

"It gave her an early set of skills that she kept working on," Leach says. "Over there, the training in England is so much more intense. She brought the skills she learned in Europe over here and started with such a good foundation. When I first saw her in ninth grade, she was further along than other girls her age. She was a ninth grader and had the skills of a senior."

So, it comes as no surprise that Blanchard had a memorable career at Queen Anne's.

The Bayside Conference named the 5-foot-6-inch Blanchard as its Player of the Year this fall after she totaled team highs in goals (23) and assists (13) to lead the Lions to an 11-2 record.

The forward had the winning goal in a 2-0 victory over heated rival Kent Island and scored the game-winner in the last two minutes in a 3-2 conquest of North Carolina.

"When she has the ball on her feet, she makes good things happen," Queen Anne's County Girls Soccer Coach Mike Kern says. "She is just a playmaker and makes everyone around her better."

The four-year starter set school records in points (118) and goals (85).

Blanchard, who plays basketball and tennis, too, scored 26 goals as a junior to earn honorable mention all-state honors, and had 21 goals as a sophomore.

“She shattered both of the soccer records,” Kern says. “No one had 100 points before her. The most goals anyone had before her was 62.”

Leach also coached the Kent Island girls soccer team and his squad had its hands full when facing Blanchard.

“All the teams key on her because she is so dangerous with the ball,” Leach says. “She creates so much offense for her team.”

Leach and Kern look forward to Blanchard playing at Division III McDaniel.

“I think she could have played at a higher level than McDaniel, but that’s where she wanted to go,” Kern says. “I think she will have a great career there and be a leader on the team. She has the potential to break records there.”

WOMAN

100 YEARS. WHAT'S NEXT?

PART 1

What's Up? Media has teamed up with many passionate women from the community to commemorate the centennial of women's suffrage. Year of the Woman is a nonprofit organization devoted to celebrating how far we've come while envisioning what's next. Through this endeavor, we hope to create a platform in which the community as a whole can join the conversation, discussing the changes that have taken place while envisioning the next 100 years and the work yet to be done. In this upcoming year, the What's Up? Media publications will feature a series of stories themed around women's suffrage. Throughout 2020, Year of the Woman hopes to sponsor a series of speakers, events, films, and book clubs. We also plan to work closely with local schools so that children and young adults—who can't even imagine a world where women had no rights—can learn the importance of this monumental time in history. We hope that you can join us in bringing awareness to the 100th anniversary of women receiving the right to vote!

August 18, 1920

INTRODUCTION

More than 140 years after the Declaration of Independence established a United States in which “...all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness,” the extension of these very rights to women hung on fate’s precipice within the Tennessee legislature on one hot August day, for one final vote.

At stake, women’s rights, specifically suffrage—the right to vote in political elections. One year prior, both the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate voted on and passed the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, granting women the right to vote. The amendment was then sent to all 48 states for ratification, with a sunset of one year to vote on the legislation. To be written into the Constitution, two-thirds of the states’ approval (36 total) was needed. By March of 1920, 35 had approved the amendment, but several southern states, including Maryland, had rejected it. Tennessee’s vote on August 18th was the amendment’s last hope for ratification into the U.S. Constitution. The state legislature was deadlocked in a 48-48 tie with the deciding vote resting on the shoulders of 23-year-old legislator Harry T. Burn.

He nervously stood before his peers to cast his vote. Minutes passed, which felt like a lifetime. “Aye,” Burn finally called out, and ratification of the 19th Amendment was written into history.

This history, of how women’s rights and suffrage, came to fruition, will be remembered this year, 2020—the 100th anniversary of the ratification of the 19th Amendment. The word remember is important. Though many aspects of this achievement are to be celebrated, we remember the events before, during, and after “The Vote” because this history was not always celebratory, or beautiful, or exalting. It most certainly was not easy. It was an extreme struggle for basic rights. By extension, the fight for women’s rights was a fight for civil rights.

And this struggle continues today. Throughout the course of this year, What’s Up? Media will present a series of articles, events, and coverage dedicated to women’s rights and suffrage. We’ll help tell the stories of the women (and men) who contributed to this American history. Also, we’ll explore contemporary issues still affecting our society. And it is our hope that, together, we will learn how to improve ourselves and our communities for the benefit of generations to come. We remember women’s history; we celebrate the Year of the Woman.

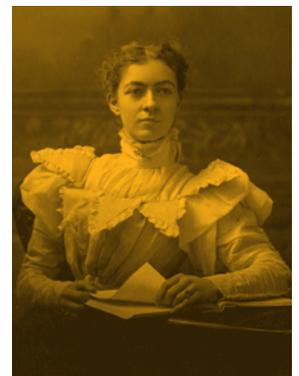

Sirens' Call

Historical heroines, from Hatshepsut in ancient Egypt to Abigail Adams in Colonial America, laid a foundation of accomplishments, on which the call for women's rights could be built upon in the United States

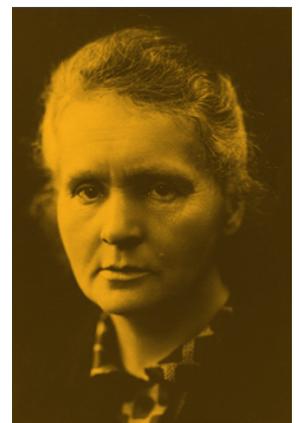

By Ellen Moyer

Mary Engle Pennington was 12 years old when she came across a book on medical chemistry that sparked her curiosity. Years later, in an interview with the New Yorker she would describe this as a milestone in her life; "...to know that oxygen and nitrogen, things I couldn't touch, taste, or smell, really existed...lickety hoop...this was amazing and I wanted to know more, much more, and so I asked the headmistress at my school for a course in chemistry." Pennington was denied. This was 1884 and such pursuits by women were considered wholly inappropriate and unladylike. Curiosity, imagination, and higher education were not encouraged for women, whose choices for life pursuits were very constricted to marriage, often arranged.

Pennington was raised in a Quaker family with a tradition that recognized men and women as equals and encouraged women to speak up and write, activities denied to women in general. Undaunted, and not to be denied, in 1890 she asked to be admitted to the University of Pennsylvania School of Science and was accepted. She completed her degree in two years but was denied a diploma because the Board of Trustees disapproved of a woman's presence in the university. This disapproval was circumvented by a university statute that allowed students in extraordinary cases to be enrolled in graduate studies. So it is, that Pennington entered the University Electro Chemical School and graduated in 1895 with a PH.D. M.E. As she was reluctantly known much of her life to obscure her identity as a woman on job applications, she went on to become the nation's authority on refrigeration and the means of protecting us from the bacteria that accumulated in milk, eggs, fish, and poultry responsible for sickness and death.

Mary Engle Pennington, of the United States, and Marie Curie, of Poland, defied all odds against women during the late 1800s to become renowned scientists within their respective fields.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Lucretia Coffin Mott would become two of the most prominent women's rights activists in the United States upon planning the first ever women's rights conference in Seneca Falls, New York, in 1848.

Five years her senior on the other side of the Atlantic, Marie Sklodowska Curie, born in 1867 into a scholarly and genius mathematics family, had been denied entrance to universities in her native Poland and in France. Doggedly, and not to be denied, she persistently pursued education in the Flying University, available to women and eventually the University of Paris. The discoverer of radium and polonium, she would become the first woman to receive the Nobel Prize in Physics and another in Chemistry. Asked to speak with her husband on radioactivity, she, as a woman and for the skeptics of women's capacity, was denied the speaker's platform.

However, as the 20th century arrived, changes for women's rights were in the wind. With courage and fortitude and perseverance, women worldwide were pursuing the right to vote, though efforts began years earlier. In the United States, after decades of hearings before the House of Representatives Judiciary Committee on resolutions extending the right to vote to women in federal elections were rebuffed, women, led by Alice Paul, a Quaker from New Jersey, were marching in the streets and picketing the White House and President Woodrow Wilson. Beaten, jailed, jeered at, and force-fed on hunger strikes, women committed to the fight for freedom and fair representation of the governed continued.

Years earlier in 1892, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, in a speech titled "Solitude of Self," she delivered before the House Judiciary Committee, described the satire of a woman's position described in Shakespeare's Titus and Andronicus thusly: "Rude men seized the King's daughter, cut out her tongue, cut off her hands, and then bid her to call for water and wash her hands." This, she said, was the condition of women today, robbed of natural rights to be all that they could be, denied education, denied employment, and handicapped by law and custom. Ostracized, denied the right to vote and inclusion in a representative government, and robbed of self-respect, women felt compelled to fight for their benefit, happiness, and the general good.

In 1868 and 1870, after the Civil War, the 14th and 15th Amendments to the U.S. Constitution extended citizenship to all persons born or naturalized in the U.S. and specified "that the right to vote shall not be denied on the basis of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." Half the nation's population, women, were not, however, included as entitled citizens born or naturalized in the United States. Finally, on June 4th, 1919, Congress passed a resolution supported reluctantly by President Wilson that stated "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied...on account of sex." It would take a full year and by a final one vote in the Tennessee legislature for the 19th Amendment to be ratified.

"Never doubt that a small group of thoughtful, caring, committed citizens can change the world," opined cultural anthropologist Margaret Meade. Indeed, the ratification of the 19th Amendment—which was set in motion half a century earlier by a committee of five and the signatures of 68 women in the first women's conference in human history to discuss the social, civil, and religious conditions and rights of women, held in Seneca, New York, in 1848—proved her right.

Walt Longmire, the fictional Wyoming sheriff introduced in Craig Johnson's Longmire western series, reflects on "how it is a women's lot to be dismissed by men." Where did this begin?

Gone, But Not Forgotten

In 1478 BC, Hatshepsut, daughter, sister, and wife of a king, became the Pharaoh in Egypt's 18th Dynasty. She reigned for 21 years and is considered by Egyptologists as one the most successful Pharaohs. She was successful in war, established important trade routes, and commissioned hundreds of construction projects. Yet after her death and toward the end of her stepson's reign, Hatshepsut's name was erased and her images chiseled off monuments, causing her to disappear from Egyptian history until rediscovered in 1822. The ancients believed that if you were invisible and forgotten, you ceased to be.

Some have conjectured that, while it was unusual for a woman to be Pharaoh, a successful and glorious reign as Hatshepsut's demonstrated that a woman was as capable of governing as a male, and was a threat to future kings. Men preferred women to be content with their traditional lot as wife, sister, and eventual mother of a king. And so, it has been for centuries that powerful and contributing women have been relegated to the dust bin and forgotten in history.

Fast forward to the New World...Massachusetts in 1692. For 15 months, mass hysteria ruled the colony in what would later be described as the deadliest witch hunt in history. For 60 years, women had worked side by side with men to forge a home and community out of the wilderness of the Massachusetts Bay Colony. Taming the wilderness and facing Native Americans was no small task, yet the Colony had become prosperous. But when Preacher Cotton Mather tried to prove that demons were alive and among us and that all who did not believe in ghosts were heretics, life for women changed. In the Puritan-based religious community, women were believed to be inherently sinful and weak in body and soul and, therefore, more susceptible to the tricks of Satan than men. So, it followed that women, after centuries of dismissal as capable equals, became the target for every incident outside of church behavior norms. Unmarried women and women without children were targets of neighbor arguments, and the confusion of teenage girls as they struggled with growing up. Over 15 months, 200 were accused of witchcraft. Nineteen were convicted and 14 women were hung before this march against the devil, identified as the culprit in simple small infractions, was thwarted in 1693.

Annapolis bears the name of Queen Anne of Great Britain, who was sometimes described as a weak Monarch (1702–1714) by male counterparts. Yet, Anne united Scotland and England, was successful in war with France and Spain, created thoroughbred racing as an industry celebrated annually at Ascot, regularly attended meetings of Parliament, and “presided over an age of artistic, literary, scientific, economic and political advancement made possible by the stability and prosperity of her reign.” She also left the monarchy fiscally solvent for 100 years. Not a bad legacy.

On April 26th, 1777, 16-year-old Sybil Ludington rode through a dark and rainy night 40 miles to summon the militia for her father, Colonel Ludington, to protect Danbury, Connecticut, from the British. The militia arrived too late to prevent some burning, but was able to drive the British back to the sea at Cape Cod. Sybil rode alone and further than Paul Revere, a middle-aged respected and wealthy silver smith accompanied by other men. He was eulogized by author John Greenleaf Whittier in 1861 in his poem “Paul Revere’s Ride.” Sybil Ludington was rediscovered 200 years later by Artist Anne Huntington of Connecticut, who memorialized her in bronze statues riding her horse; a statue, among the few of women (8 percent of all memorial monuments), is placed in Danbury and Washington, D.C. Still, Paul Revere is the name publicly remembered with rousing the battle cry of “the British are coming” for his courageous venture in 1775. There were others.

The First Sirens

Abigail Adams—the wife of John, a patriot and founder of the new United States—issued the first siren cry for women’s rights. In March of 1776 in a long letter to her husband in Philadelphia she writes:

“...in the new Code of Laws, which I suppose it will be necessary for you to make, I desire you would Remember the Ladies, and be more generous and favorable to them than your ancestors. Do not put such unlimited power into the hands of the husbands. Remember, all men would be tyrants if they could. If particular care and attention is not paid to the ladies, we are determined to foment a rebellion, and will not hold ourselves bound by any laws in which we have no say or representation. That your sex is naturally tyrannical is a truth thoroughly established as to admit of no dispute, but such of you as wish to be happy willingly give up the harsh title of master for the more tender and endearing one of friend. Why then, not put it out of the power of the vicious and the lawless to use us with cruelty and indignity with impunity. Men of sense in all ages abhor those customs which treat us only as the vassals of your sex. Regard us then as beings placed by providence under your protection and in imitation of the supreme being make use of that power only for our happiness.”

Though John Adams, our second President, sought the advice and counsel of his wife, his semi-humorous remark to her letter on “Despotism of the Petticoat” indicated he would not be fighting for women’s rights. Abigail, a supporter of education for women and recognition of equality with men, however, had thrown down the gauntlet. One hundred fifty years later, after fomenting rebellion, the rights of Ladies would be remembered.

The issue of slavery was also avoided by the authors of our Declaration. In 1832, when journalist William Lloyd Garrison organized an anti-slavery association, he invited the full participation of women. Women, particularly of the Quaker faith, where women and men were considered equals, had begun to gain fame as writers and speakers, actions not permitted in the social culture for women in general. Other abolitionists did not welcome Garrison’s ideas. For Quaker women, such as Lucretia Mott and the Grimke sisters, speaking in public on the issue of slavery was also a noteworthy stand for women’s rights and social reform.

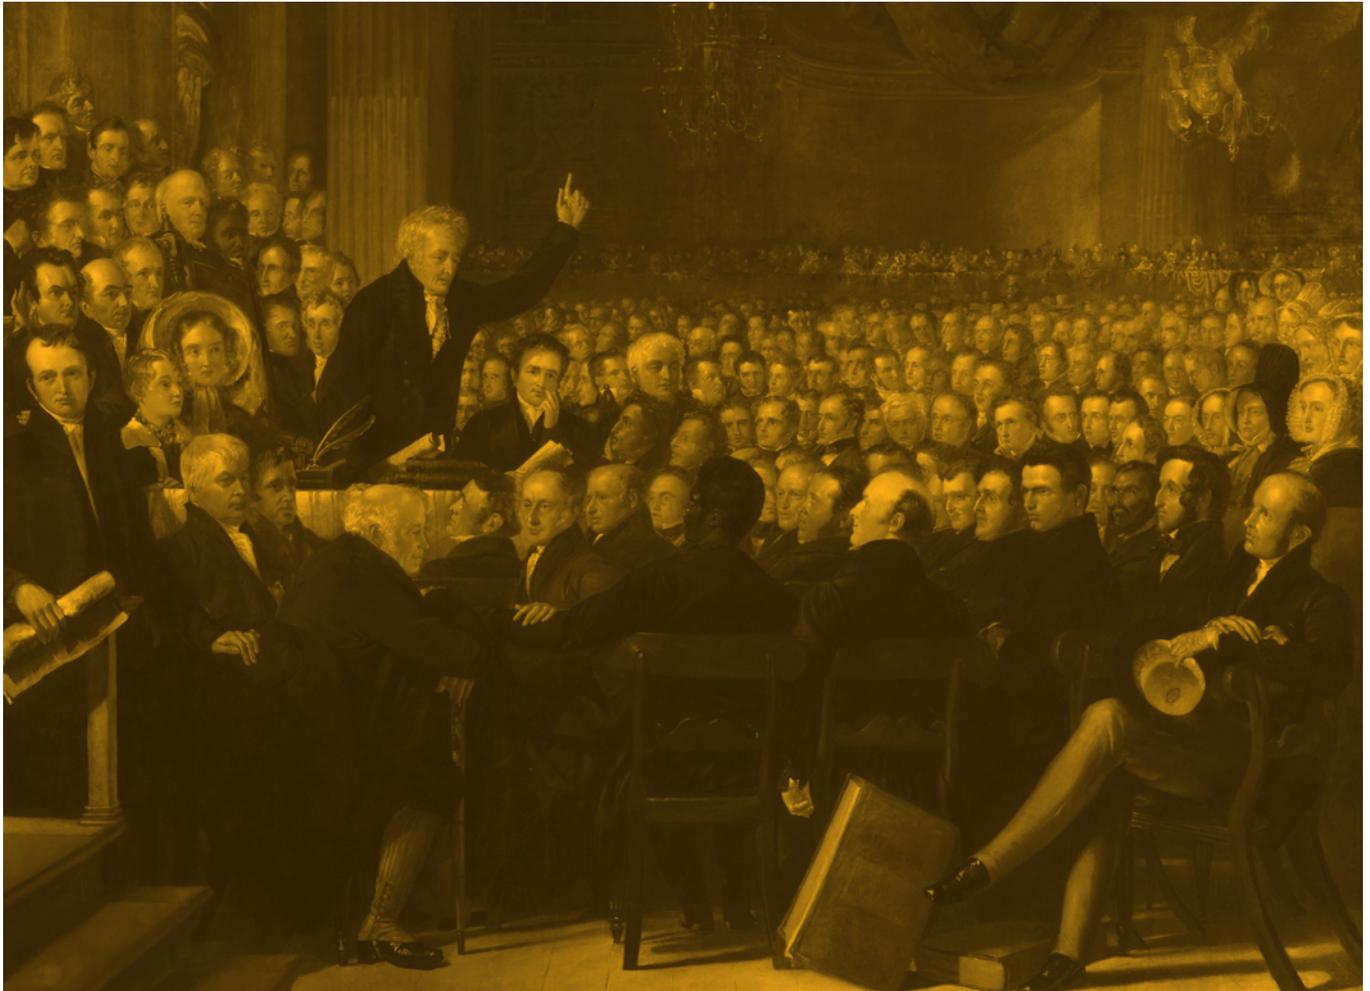

Addressing this threat to societal norms, the General Assembly of the Congregational Church warned women that such action, speaking in public, directly defied St. Paul’s instruction to women to be silent in church (1 Timothy 2:12).

Abigail Adams, painted by Gilbert Stuart, pleaded with her husband John, to “remember the ladies” when drafting the Declaration of Independence.

Queen Anne of Great Britain and Ireland, from whom the City of Annapolis was named, painted by Michael Dahl.

The Anti-Slavery Society Convention, 1840, by Benjamin Robert Haydon (died 1846). Lucretia Mott and Elizabeth Cady Stanton, who would organize the Seneca Falls Convention eight years later, met at this convention.

Speaking to mixed crowds was considered promiscuous by some. Other were just uncertain as to what was proper, as the writings of the Grimke sisters were becoming increasingly popular and striking a chord to the tyranny of men over women's lives. The Grimke sisters, Sarah and Angelina, had witnessed slavery first-hand growing up on the family plantation in South Carolina and were among the first to speak out on social reform. They also preached "that women were not created as a gift or for the possession of men, but rather as unique, intelligent, capable beings." They and Lucretia Mott and their followers were ridiculed and threatened for their public abolitionist stands. Nevertheless, they would not be silenced.

In 1840, the first World Anti-Slavery Convention was held in London. Lucretia Mott, Quaker preacher, teacher, and outstanding public speaker, was selected with five other women to attend the conference. But, as the first day and swearing in of delegates transpired and after a day of debate, the women were excluded from the conference participation. They were allowed to sit in the gallery and watch the proceedings, but not allowed to speak.

Nevertheless, Mott was described by an Irish reporter as "the Lioness of the Convention." The men that convened did not know what they had wrought. This humiliating action of excluding women intimately involved with the anti-slavery movement, would inspire the women to other actions. Also attending the convention was Elizabeth Cady Stanton, on her honeymoon with her lawyer husband. Stanton and Mott met for the first time, became fast friends, and went on to turn their attention to the rights of women. They planned the first ever conference for women, in 1848 in Seneca, New York.

Next month, we continue our "Year of the Woman" article series. The 1848 Seneca Falls Conference acts as a "call to arms" for women throughout the United States, as the women's rights movement comes to fruition and builds momentum unlike any seen before.

STRIVING FOR FOUR

WHAT FOUR AREA
WOMEN CAN TEACH US ABOUT
LIVES WELL-LIVED

BY LISA HILLMAN | PHOTOGRAPHY BY STEPHEN BUCHANAN

No matter how old you are, at some point you may face the existential question, how long will I live? How much time is left? Even more importantly, how can you ensure that your remaining years will be good years? During this “Year of the Woman,” as we celebrate 100 years of progress women have made, “What’s Up? Media” interviewed four area nonagenarians who candidly and generously shared their personal stories. Each is 90 or older, two are closing in on 100, and all show the pluck and verve to get there.

MISS BEA

She might as well be “Queen Bea.” Holding court in the living room of her daughter’s home in Bloomsbury Square in downtown Annapolis, she’s surrounded by her three “babies:” daughter Jackie, age 73, daughter Burma, age 80, and son Joseph, age 79. The only one missing, who lives in New Jersey, is daughter Sharon, age 77.

Beatrice Palestine Smith was born Dec. 21, 1920. And it’s clear right away what keeps her going. “These are my angels,” she says.

In addition to her four children, eight grandchildren, seven great-grandchildren, and two great-great-grandchildren, Asbury Methodist Church and Bates Senior Center form the focus of her days.

At Bates, where she volunteers every weekday—except for Friday when she gets her hair done—she’s behind the snack bar serving customers with her pals, two men in their 70s and 80s. “It’s Bob, Bea, and Bill,” she says laughing. Something of an icon in the African-American community, when she walks into Asbury Methodist Church, her children proclaim “it’s like Lazarus arising from the dead. They clap and hug her.” When asked how she got to be nearly 100, she points to “the man upstairs.”

RITA

Like Miss Bea, religion features prominently in Rita Kapuch's life, too. A first glance at her home in Heritage Harbor tells the story of an active life. Walls are lined with collections of colorful plates sporting images of children, a series of racks displaying 300 spoons, a glass case with Hummel, Lenox, and dolls from all over the world—testament to her ability to attract friends and keep relatives. Born in September, 1921, Rita's erect posture and meticulous appearance—a belted, beige dress, pearls, and high heels—believe her 98 years.

Three days a week she attends Mass at noon and—like Miss Bea—gets her hair done weekly, too. Every Tuesday morning, she volunteers a four-hour shift in the central gift shop at Anne Arundel Medical Center. A member of the hospital Auxiliary for 30 years, Rita quips "I've helped a lot of grandparents buy teddy bears for their new grandchild."

Like Miss Bea, Rita is clearly proud of her three children. Daughter Linda is an Episcopal priest, Tom, a Naval Academy graduate, is a retired Navy captain, and Steven now works at the Pentagon. She also beams over her five grandchildren. Grandson Joe just completed a residency in neurosurgery at the Mayo Clinic. Granddaughter Katie has her doctorate and is a professor at Texas Tech University. Christine is in communications with Georgia Tech. Stephanie works in business development and Jennifer just graduated from George Mason. Family members visit often, but it's her friends and work at the hospital that keep her the busiest.

"I'd like to quit eventually," she muses, "but my friends won't let me." Her friends are 85 and 83.

ANNA

It's that sense of purpose, a reason to get up and out every morning, that drives all these women. There's no better example than Anna E. Greenberg.

Well-known in Annapolis for her volunteerism, Anna—like Miss Bea—was born in town, Dec., 1929. Many are astonished to learn that this active, “professional volunteer,” as she refers to herself, is 90.

She plans her days with a meeting or appointment nearly every morning to “get up and get out,” but does allow herself an occasional Saturday morning “to lounge in.” Like Rita and Miss Bea, she keeps a weekly hair appointment.

Anna, too, professes pride in her three, adult granddaughters and her children. Daughter Joyce is a successful New York businesswoman; son David is a nonprofit executive who lives in Baltimore.

Returning to Annapolis after life abroad with her husband Ed, a 1950 graduate of the United States Naval Academy, Anna made it her personal mission to help nonprofit organizations. Her impact has been far-reaching, but none more so than the Annapolis Symphony Orchestra where she twice served as board president and laid the groundwork in the 1990s for its current success. Along with the Symphony, she is proud of her work with Hadassah which “taught me how to fundraise, speak, and organize.” A founding member of many major nonprofits, she is honored to serve on the St. John's College Board of Visitors and Governors.

Religion features in her life. As Anna quips, “God doesn't need me yet. He still wants me to do good things here.” She's witnessed anti-Semitism and has served Jewish organizations to combat it and to advance Jewish causes.

EVA

Like Anna, another lady new to her 90s exudes a sense of purpose. Eva Brann may be the most renowned nationally of the four nonagenarians. Born in January, 1929, she is a former dean and longest serving tutor at St John's College. A 2005 recipient of the National Humanities Medal, Eva is widely credited with advancing the college's unique "Great Books" program. With her parents she left Berlin, Germany, at age 12 just ahead of World War II.

Single her entire life—but "not for lack of possibilities"—Eva counts among her "children" the hundreds of St John's students she's tutored and mentored over more than 60 years. Widely published, she's currently on contract with two colleagues for a series of books translating Plato from Greek to English for college and high school students. It's a highly disciplined process. Every third week, each of the trio has to proof a page, striving for "absolute accuracy and readability in English."

Clearly a leader in her field, today Eva tutors with a colleague. She says her dean pairs her with a younger colleague to be sure someone is there if she gets sick and, she surmises, "to keep an eye on the younger ones."

She loves being around younger people, great books, and the free-flowing discussions. After 62 years Eva admits "I've heard pretty much everything, but it's always new coming out of a different mouth."

WHAT ABOUT HEALTH?

All four women use the word "blessed" in summarizing their lives, no more so than when describing their health. Some work at it. Others laugh.

Eva describes her health as "good." She stopped jogging years ago when balance issues arose. She once preferred "Jewish tennis. You go up to the net and discuss current affairs." Her primary care doctor has ruled out further mammograms. As he quipped "If there's anything going on with you, you'll be dead by the time we can do anything about it."

Miss Bea regularly sees her primary care physician, a cardiologist and an ophthalmologist for macular degeneration. With daily eye drops she's doing well. Her children claim her hearing is excellent: "She hears everything she's not supposed to hear."

Rita also suffers from macular degeneration that's under control with care. She once square-danced and took long walks around the Naval Academy but admits today she is "much slower." "I'm going to take it easy. I want to do what I can."

Anna says her health is "excellent" and credits decades of a rigorous exercise routine. She's had a personal trainer for 25 years and works out every Tuesday and Friday for one hour with weights, bars, and ropes.

When it comes to diet and alcohol, there's wide divergence.

More traditionally health-conscious, Anna adheres to a lean selection of salads, fish, and only an occasional dessert. "I've watched calories my entire life. My father cautioned me, you're a big-boned woman." She does, however, like alcohol: "Vodka during the day; Scotch at night."

Rita describes her diet as “on the plain side”—no gourmet food. When children visit, she likes to prepare a Lithuanian dish of cabbage, potatoes, and carrots.

To Eva “green is poisonous.” She hates beans but likes Brussels sprouts and spinach, if creamed. She eats what she likes and it’s often sweets, hamburgers, and cheese sandwiches. As for alcohol, she’s not a drinker claiming she “just doesn’t care for it.”

Miss Bea is the same. Ask her about her diet and she cracks up: “O Lord!” She eats everything. “No restrictions, that’s for sure!” For her it’s all about BBQ, crab cakes, and butter pecan ice cream, as much as she can get. She doesn’t drink, but admits “I had my share of that,” mostly Johnny Walker. These days it’s cold water or iced tea.

HOW ABOUT MENTAL HEALTH?

Although each of these ladies is highly active, strong in character, focused on her work, or volunteerism, there’s a certain melancholy that seeps through their conversation.

Despite having many friends, all suffer from something that’s surprising. Ironically, they do not know any women, or very few, who are their age. Eva puts it best. “Even though I spend my life among the young, I suffer from tenth-decade loneliness.”

For Anna and Rita, there’s also an undeniable loneliness that widowhood has wrought. Anna was married for 54.5 years when Ed died suddenly in 2004 of cardiac arrest. “Ed opened up the world to me and supported me in whatever I did.” Rita was married to Joe for 66 years. He died in 2014 and she “misses him every day.” She dreads June 28, the anniversary of his death and says, “They say it gets easier with time, but not for me.”

Despite the loss of her husband, Anna claims nothing depresses her. Does she ever feel blue? “No. I don’t have time for that.” She does admit to feeling more impatient. “Time is short. Punctuality is important to me.”

Miss Bea lost her husband in April, 1968 – “the same month as Martin Luther King died.” She, too, never gets depressed. Her kids chime in “She’s not home long enough.” Dubbing herself a “rent-a-mourner,” she attends many funerals and accepts what will come next. “I know I’m gonna’ leave here one of these days to meet my master.”

Eva also believes staying busy is the best medicine for mental health: “The best cure-all is work.” You have to focus “and then you’re not thinking about yourself.” She adds: “Everything that doesn’t make you cry makes you laugh.”

ARE GENES A FACTOR?

Diet, exercise, staying active in something you love—all are factors these women can and do control. But what about their parentage? Research indicates genetic heritage can make a difference in longevity.

Once more, there are commonalities. In most cases at least one parent lived into a ninth decade. Miss Bea’s mom was 99 when she died. Rita’s father was 96. Eva’s parents lived into their 70s and 80s. Only Anna’s mom died earlier...in her 50s.

Perhaps more significant about lineage is that the parents of all four women left their daughters with role models of hard work, good marriages, and a belief their children could succeed.

STAYING CURRENT

When you’re 90 or older, where does technology fit in your life? What about keeping up with the news? Or do you?

WHAT RESEARCH RECOMMENDS

Despite a recent downturn in longevity due to the drug crisis, people 90 and older now comprise the fastest growing segment of the U.S. population. According to the U.S. Census Bureau the population of people 90-plus is expected to quadruple, from 4.7 percent today to 10 percent by 2050. Research widely adheres to these recommendations to help enhance a longer and healthier life:

- Maintain a healthy diet and watch portion control
- Exercise and remain physically active
- Get enough sleep
- Reduce stress
- Sustain family, social and community relationships
- Take control of your health and practice prevention

Again, in all cases the women stay current. Eva has the advantage of spending her days on a college campus where discussions of political philosophy are daily fodder. However, she is the least technologically adept. She confesses she is “utterly ignorant” and has no computer in her home. She writes her essays and books longhand on yellow-lined legal pads with “a screw pencil.” A former student then transposes her work into Word. She owns a cell phone but seldom uses it. Friends from across the globe know to reach her—as they do often—through her landline. She answers only if it’s a caller she recognizes.

Miss Bea has a cell phone but no computer. Both Anna and Rita use their cell phones and home computers frequently. All keep up with the news, locally and nationally. Anna reads three daily newspapers.

Rita even reads the paper from her hometown of Worcester, Massachusetts, although all her friends there are gone.

ADVICE TO THOSE YOUNGER

Who wouldn’t want to live into their 90s if you could be as healthy, active, and involved as these women are?

So, what’s their advice to those aspiring to be just like them?

Eva acknowledges it’s the college that’s kept her alive. She counsels others to “do it your way. Find work that is absorbing to you.”

Anna recommends three simple rules: “Eat well. Exercise. Be positive and look to the future.” She also says it helps to be financially secure. Often to gain a leadership role in the community “you’ve got to give of your resources.”

Miss Bea admits she has had help all her life—first her grandmother, then her mother, and now her children. She tells young people to stay active and “trust in the Lord.”

It may be Rita who sums it up best. She advises younger women to “live a clean life. No drinking. No smoking. And stay active.” Then she concludes with three simple words: “Faith, family, and friends.”

A FINAL NOTE FROM THE AUTHOR

After spending time with each of these four women, what lingers are (a) the sound of their voices (b) how they appear, and (c) how much they are loved. None sounds “old” or looks “old.” You hear laughter, joy, clarity, and wisdom. You see pinked skin, lipstick, bracelets, silky blouses, and sparkling eyes. And you understand why their children, friends, and colleagues love them.

*You see women very much

O, to be like that.*

Preview of the 2020 Maryland Legislative Session

THE YEAR OF THE WOMAN WILL BE A PROMINENT THEME DURING THIS YEAR'S GENERAL ASSEMBLY

By Mark Croatti

It has been a full century since the 19th Amendment provided suffrage to all citizens, regardless of gender. Since then, 420 women have served in the U.S. Congress, including five candidates competing to be the Democratic Party's second straight female presidential nominee later this year; 43 more have been elected governor in 30 American states and territories; and another 110 have served as lieutenant governor in 44 states. Equal voting rights, however, has not led to equal political representation.

Women make up more than half of the U.S. population but only fill a quarter of the nation's legislative positions, both in Congress and in state governments nationwide. Those numbers are significantly higher in Maryland's General Assembly, where women hold 15 of 47 seats in the State Senate (32 percent) and 57 of 141 seats in the House of Delegates (40 percent).

This year, both chambers will be led by new faces. In the House, two African American women replaced Michael Busch, who served 32 years in office, 16 as Speaker. Adrienne Jones (D-District 10) will become Maryland's first female (and African American) Speaker while former Annapolis City Council Alderwoman Shaneka Henson (D-District 30A) will be sworn into Busch's delegate seat. Henson says this has caused confusion. "Some people think I am Adrienne Jones; others assumed that whoever succeeded Busch as Delegate automatically became Speaker." Another African American woman, Sheree Sample-Hughes (D-District 37A), will follow Jones as Speaker Pro-Tem. In the Senate, Thomas V. "Mike" Miller, Jr. (D-District 27) will cede the presidency after 32 years to "Bill" Ferguson, IV (D-District 46); however, Miller, first elected as a Delegate in 1971, will remain a Senator for the 45th straight year.

RECAP OF THE 2019 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Despite daunting health challenges the last legislative session faced—Miller announced on the second day that he had stage-four prostate cancer; Busch, who was recovering from a liver transplant, died of pneumonia on the second to last day—it was very productive. An almost $47 billion budget—four billion dollars more than fiscal 2018—included many significant pieces of legislation.

Criminal penalties for not reporting suspected child abuse and cyberbullying increased to a maximum $10,000 fine and/or three years in prison (up to ten years if cyberbullying causes a suicide). All suicide attempt survivors are now exempt from prosecution (unless other crimes are committed). Lawmakers abolished Maryland's Handgun Permit Review Board of cases appealing State Police denials (now heard by administrative law judges). More of Maryland's electricity must come from renewable sources such as solar power over oil, coal, and gas. Purchasers of tobacco products must be 21. Businesses with 14 or more employees must pay a $15 an hour minimum wage by 2025 (those with fewer employees have longer). While the overall amount of bills ultimately signed by the Governor may have seemed discouraging, several women beat the odds. The number of laws that experienced senators Melony Griffith (D-District 25) and Adelaide Eckardt (R-District 37) sponsored reached double digits; in fact, all 14 of Griffith's bills passed while Eckardt's overall tally placed her among the 20 most successful lawmakers. Sen. Sarah Elfretth (D-District 30) led all newcomers in bill-to-law efficiency (80 percent).

WHAT TO EXPECT IN THE 2020 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Education and The Blueprint for Maryland's Future

The final conclusions of the 26-member Kirwan Commission on Innovation and Excellence in Education, created by the General Assembly in 2016, were scheduled to be submitted by Dec. 31, 2019. The core of the report's "Blueprint for Maryland's Future" will be a new educational funding formula—replacing the current, decades-old funding estimates—to more equitably disperse state-collected revenues to Maryland school districts by assigning higher amounts to less wealthy school systems and lower amounts to wealthier ones, with a focus on addressing child poverty where the highest disadvantaged populations exist.

"SOME PEOPLE THINK I AM ADRIENNE JONES; OTHERS ASSUMED THAT WHOEVER SUCCEEDED BUSCH AS DELEGATE AUTOMATICALLY BECAME SPEAKER."

—SHANEKA HENSON

The report will endorse increasing both teacher salaries—with stricter requirements for teacher certification—and pre-kindergarten programs. "We have not in any way planned for the cost of expanding pre-K," Sen. Elfreth cautions. "The Commission's report will pose significant capital challenges." According to Del. Brooke Lierman (D-District 46), even more money will be needed "for resources not only within the classroom," such as books, supplies, equipment, and staff, "but also outside the classroom, including building construction and student activities." Paying for the Commission's major proposals will require an almost four billion dollar increase in allocations from state, county, and city governments. "Where do we get that?" asks Sen. Eckardt, the Treasurer (and a former President) of the Maryland Federation of Republican Women. "Our rural communities just don't have it, and they cannot be forced to decide to pay for this blueprint or providing basic services such as police and fire departments."

There are many ideas being proposed to answer Sen. Eckardt's question. One way is to increase revenue without raising income taxes. "I can unequivocally say that there will not be a six thousand dollar per household tax to fund the report's proposals, as some have reported," Sen. Elfreth countered. "I instead advocate keeping our tax base up to date with technology. We can collect hundreds of millions of dollars in annual revenue from taxing the sales of online purchases and sports gaming—which is also connected to the future of the Pimlico and Laurel racetracks."

Del. Lierman brought up the 2017 Tax Cuts and Jobs Act that created Qualified Opportunity Zones to promote economic growth and new jobs by offering federal tax benefits for a commitment to inject eligible capital into community projects. "Governors in many states are recommending that certain census tracts become opportunity zones using monies like capital gains that would be 'taxed into' opportunity zone funds," she says. "If you leave that money there for 10 years, the capital gains taxes are erased and the money will turn a profit. Anyone can create an opportunity zone fund, so Maryland needs to align their tax credits to encourage this." Another way is to reduce costs elsewhere, such as lowering non-renewable energy consumption. Del. Alice Cain (D-District 30A), the former Executive Vice President of the nonprofit Teach Plus with a 15-year background in education, sponsored the 2019 Green Schools Act to encourage this approach. "We want to build the next generation of environmental standards by empowering students to form community partnerships that will decrease the carbon footprint of Maryland's classrooms," she says.

A third way is to disburse supplemental funds ahead of time. In anticipation of the Commission's report, legislators approved a school spending bill in the 2019 session that provides, over the next two years, an additional $800 million past the normal levels of annual educational support (five of the amendments on this bill were written by Del. Cain). More ideas are on the way, according to Sen. Eckardt. "How to implement the Kirwan recommendations will consume a large portion of the 2020 session, but it is the legislature's most important priority."

Environmental Protection

In addition to the Green Schools Act, Sen. Elfreth is concerned about "high levels of lead in the water that schools use." She and Del. Cain will be co-sponsoring a bill that addresses storm water management problems. "The building manual of the Maryland Department of the Environment mandates that new construction projects account for 1.7 inches of water during rainstorms," Sen. Elfreth says. "We want to increase it to 2.5 inches.” Efforts to combat climate change will not be limited to the schools. “I also want to do something about whether or not Maryland can subvert federal restrictions on where solar panels can be placed,” Sen. Eckardt adds. “Currently, local authority is being overridden.” Del. Lierman, the incoming subcommittee chair of the Environmental and Transportation Committee, mentioned another major task force scheduled to release its findings in 2020: The Maryland Transportation Administration’s two-year regional transit plan. “This past July, the MTA’s first unconstrained capital needs assessment showed a two billion dollar gap in what they need vs. what was allocated.” She pledges “to close this gap” and “support legislation to reduce greenhouse gases by making our transportation systems electricity-based.” She stressed that “as a state and as a country, we’re at a critical juncture regarding our carbon footprint. We need to right the wrongs of previous generations.”

Election Reform

Del. Cain serves on a subcommittee on election law that—ahead of the 2020 presidential election—intends to take on “deep fake videos on social media,” misleading clips that inaccurately portray anyone seemingly saying anything. “I realize this is a free speech issue so they can’t be completely banned but we can mandate that they not be available a certain number of days before an election.” Adds Lois Hybl, Co-President of the League of Women Voters, “In addition to campaign finance reform, we need to ensure secure elections, such as using paper ballots, which allow an audit of the results; expand polling places on campus; and provide felons in prison with more access to voting materials so that when they vote upon their release—which felons can do since 2016—they’ll be prepared.” The League is also advocating redistricting reform. Hybl urged “an independent commission to do it. The same standards for state legislative districts should be applied to congressional districts.” Ashley Oleson, the League’s Maryland Director, warns that “the current outcome without these standards is voter suppression.”

Recycled Bills from 2019

is scheduled to be publicized in time to allow the current legislative session to consider their recommendations. Several related bills to legalize, regulate, and tax cannabis for adult use were defeated last year, including a proposal to let the people vote on legalization in 2020. “Is it time to go forward when we don’t have all of the research we’ll need to make the best decisions?” Sen. Eckardt asks. “In other states that have opened the market, there have been significant law enforcement issues.”

ASSISTED SUICIDE: For the fifth straight year, the End-of-Life Option Act allowing terminally ill patients to end their own lives according to a set of strict guidelines—adult Maryland residents with less than six months to live—is expected to be reintroduced. Last year, it passed in the House but died in the Senate.

FIREARMS: Two gun-related bills are expected to make a comeback, one to put the Colt AR-15 Sporter H-BAR (heavy-barrel) rifle on Maryland’s regulated weapons list (died in committee) and a related bill mandating long gun licenses (stuck in committee without a vote—Maryland currently requires only hand gun licenses). In addition, Del. Kathy Szeliga (R-District 7), the 2016 Republican U.S. Senate nominee, will retry upping the penalty for stealing a firearm to a felony (from a misdemeanor). “Many people committing crimes don’t use legal weapons,” she says. “The top violence issue is stolen guns, especially in Baltimore.” Del. Cain will both retry banning 3D-printed guns and submit a new bill targeting improperly stored weapons.

Women’s Issues (That Affect Everyone)

HUMAN TRAFFICKING: According to Del. Cain, “This is a growing problem in Maryland. The BWI Corridor is one of the worst places in the country for the sex trade. We need to increase the penalties for human trafficking and stop requiring the survivors of this practice to testify against the accused. Don’t victimize the victims.” Del. Trent Kittleman (R-District 9A) is the current President of the Maryland Women’s Legislative Caucus, which “firmly believes that fighting human trafficking is a non-partisan issue that should be embraced by the entire legislature.”

ABORTION: In 2017, Maryland accounted for almost 30,000 of nearly 900,000 abortions nationwide. As anti-abortion laws were implemented in several southern states and then challenged in court, a

—TRENT KITTLEMAN

2019 bill requiring doctors to submit abortion-related statistics to the Maryland Department of Health is expected to be reintroduced (it died in committee).

SEPARATE MURDER CHARGES FOR FETUSES: A 2019 law that merely added to the penalty of killing a pregnant woman if the fetus died didn't go far enough, Del. Kittleman says. "There needs to be a separate murder charge, which some people may be hesitant to add because it could impact the abortion issue."

YOUTH MATRIMONY: Sen. Elfreth wants to make raising Maryland's marriage age, "currently 15 ½ under certain circumstances," a public health issue. "Many studies argue that it's much better to wait until age 18."

EARLY CHILDHOOD DEVELOPMENT: Sen. Eckardt is adamant that "if 2020 is the Year of the Woman, it should also be the Year of the Healthy Brain." The Kirwan Commission "has a heavy emphasis on pre-K programs but we need to start with pregnancy, pre-natal care, birth, and then the first couple of years before pre-K even starts. Early brain development—from conception to age five—is probably the most critical period in a person's life because we can make corrections for children on the autism spectrum and improve the consequences of brain trauma. High child care costs need to be addressed and linked to the promotion of brain health. There is a direct correlation between early childhood development and eventual incarceration. We need to think long-term to make progress on today's social issues, including problem behaviors such as addiction. I'd like to start this conversation and formulate a path forward."

"IF 2020 IS THE YEAR OF THE WOMAN, IT SHOULD ALSO BE THE YEAR OF THE HEALTHY BRAIN."

—ADELAIDE ECKARDT

CONCLUSION

With these and other new or reintroduced bills adding up to a projected fiscal year 2021 budget close to $50 billion—or more, depending on the outcome of three major studies covering education, transportation, and marijuana—the 2020 Maryland Legislative Session will be one of the busiest ever. The 100th anniversary of the 19th amendment will also put women's issues in the spotlight. While NASA made history last October with the first all-female spacewalk, women still earn approximately 80 cents for every dollar men earn (a figure basically unchanged since 2004). Of the many important topics facing Maryland, especially related to women, a great deal of progress has been made, but there remains so much more to do.

Mark Croatti, who teaches American Government and Comparative Politics at the United States Naval Academy and the George Washington University, has covered Maryland's Legislative Session since 2004.

Can Teachers Afford to Retire in Maryland?

PART TWO OF OUR EXAMINATION OF THE CONTROVERSIAL PERFORMANCE OF THE STATE'S PENSION FUND

By Mark Croatti

In our December issue of What's Up? Eastern Shore, we summarized the criticism of the performance of the Maryland State Retirement and Pension System, particularly as expressed by two Washington Post articles in 2016 and 2017 featuring analysis by Jeffrey Hooke, a Managing Director of Focus Securities and a senior lecturer for the Carey Business School at The Johns Hopkins University (read the full article at whatsupmag.com). Earlier this year, we interviewed Mr. Hooke and five Maryland state legislators who sit on the Joint Oversight Committee on Pensions: Delegates Brook Lierman (D-Baltimore) and Michael Jackson (D-Prince George's County), and senators Douglas J.J. Peters (D-Prince George's), Adelaide Eckardt (R-Dorchester, Caroline, Talbot and Wicomico counties), and Andrew Serafini (R-Washington County). First up: Jeffrey Hooke.

Mark Croatti: I'll get right to the point: How has the Maryland State Retirement and Pension System performed since 2016?

Jeffrey Hooke (hands me the March 31, 2019 Maryland State Retirement and Pension System Quarterly Investment Update): Fiscal year-to-date, the total plan investment performance has been 3.4 percent; for the past three years, 3.9 percent; for the past five years, 5.7 percent; for the past ten years, 9.5 percent. That means that the fund is doing worse the past three years than it was doing five and even ten years ago.

Croatti: Why?

Hooke: Poor fund management, even though Maryland pays almost $350 million a year in investment fees to professional fund managers. Maryland is in the top five of states in fees as a percent of assets; they don't even know exactly what the fees are because they're estimated. The legislature doesn't have to approve the fees; if they had to, they'd rethink it. The fees are not providing a sufficient return; they're lousy. The legislature should approve the fees!

Croatti: What about the Kumar Barve Bill passed in the 2019 legislative session?

Hooke: It was watered down considerably. It was supposed to force the disclosure of both "regular" and "hidden" fees but the pension board watered it down. The legislature has no say in who sits on the pension's Board of Trustees; the Governor appoints the trustees while a few are on the board by law. They meet every three months and select asset managers of all kinds—bonds, stocks, private equity, real estate, hedge funds, etc. The various funds in the Maryland State Retirement and Pension System can choose their own asset managers who then set up a phony benchmark as a performance goal, but always find a way to “beat” it, giving the illusion that the System is doing well. However, few states can beat the 60-40 index; most are far below. The $350 million in fees can be better spent; instead of using high-priced professionals to actively manage the fund according to a phony benchmark, Maryland should index everything and simply copy the 60-40. Low fees can still be paired with active management.

Croatti: What does this mean for future retirees?

Hooke: Ultimately, Maryland will have to cut benefits if the funds aren’t where they’re supposed to be in ten to twenty years, or they’ll have to increase employee contributions from those who haven’t retired yet, or the state’s annual contribution may need to go up as much as 50 percent from the $1 billion annually already provided, so they’ll have to raise taxes. The legislature should be asking, “Why aren’t the annual returns high enough to fully fund the number of future retirees?” But they have very little oversight. The trustees could change all of this tomorrow with one vote but they don’t want to. The Governor could have some pull, but he signed the compromise bill in 2018.

Next, we drove to Baltimore to meet with Delegate Brooke Lierman.

Mark Croatti: So, did it turn out that the pension fund was actually performing as poorly as The Washington Post articles described?

Delegate Brooke Lierman: It’s all about asset allocation. The Board moved away from the 60-40 index in order to diversify the portfolio from a more concentrated asset allocation, but they did it in a bad year, 2009, following the housing market crash, so that it would be less volatile. The model was Washington state in terms of diversification and annual returns. We are moving to where Washington is; we’re not there yet but we’re getting there.

Croatti: Jeffrey Hooke doesn’t think so.

Lierman: I know Jeffrey, I’ve talked to him many times. But according to the S&P 500, within the last thirty years, we’ve had the two best ten-year return periods, historically. Right now, we’re in a fluke period; we have to find the “sweet spot”—the lowest risk with the highest return possible. That’s the quest of the Maryland State Retirement and Pension System, to ensure we’re always able to meet our obligations to our state employees.

Croatti: Hooke says the legislature has very little oversight to ensure those goals and no power to approve the $350 million paid to the fund’s professional managers.

Lierman: There’s risk in politicizing how the fund is managed. The Maryland State Retirement and Pension System did not have the level of help it needed to hire and retain their own investment team. The better professional managers cost more. Roughly 65 percent of the fund is in passively managed stocks. Where they’re using active management is in private equity, and they’re getting excellent returns for the investment fees that are being paid, net of fees and expenses. Every asset class has exceeded its ten-year benchmark. The Maryland State Retirement and Pension System disagrees that Jeffrey’s numbers are being used to accurately portray the status of the fund. You should talk to State Senator Andrew Serafini—he’s the real expert.

Croatti: Why did the legislature decide to take a more cautious approach to reform in 2018 rather than the more aggressive suggestions highlighted by those quoted in the Washington Post articles?

Lierman: If we want to have a diversified portfolio, we need to have a certain degree of active management. The question is, do we manage the fund ourselves or source it out? The legislature passed a bill in 2018 to give the Maryland State Retirement and Pension System the ability to hire and set compensation for investment staff with the goal of bringing as much of the management as possible in-house, which we expect will happen, and that will reduce the fees.

We amended what we did in 2018 when we passed the Kumar Barve Bill in 2019, which requires disclosure of the amount of carried interest paid. Nobody wants to pay investment fees but we all want the best return. How do we empower the Maryland State Retirement and Pension System to do that? Is it appropriate for a part-time legislature with limited investment knowledge to override the many financial decisions that the Maryland State Retirement and Pension System has to make? What the legislature can do is to ensure that the Maryland State Retirement and Pension System meets its responsibilities to our retirees by providing active oversight of the Maryland State Retirement and Pension System so that everybody owed a pension has it waiting for them upon retirement. A pension is a promise and I am committed to keeping that promise.

After our visit with Delegate Lierman, we sat down with Senator Douglas J.J. Peters and Delegate Michael Jackson in Jackson's Annapolis office. They began by handing us a joint statement addressing the questions I had sent to them ahead of time. Some of their responses overlapped with Delegate Lierman's, while others offered some interesting insight summarized here:

- The Maryland State Retirement and Pension System had the portfolio Jeffrey Hooke recommends through the 1990s and 2000s but the very poor performance of S&P stocks during the 2000s was the primary contributor in the System dropping from 107 percent funded in 2000 to 63 percent funded in 2010. This represents a significant decrease in the unfunded liability which the state, employees, and other sponsors are now working to pay down. The System diversified away from stocks to reduce the ability of any one asset class to significantly impact the contribution rates of the sponsors while maintaining confidence that the mix of assets will achieve the actuarial return over time. The legislature has focused on the asset allocation question in the past. In 2016, the Treasurer was required to fund a special consultant, NEPC, to review the issue. They advised that the System stay the course. The lower returns are largely a function of this lower risk diversified approach. Viewing the returns compared to the risk, the System performs better than the 60-40 portfolio recommended by Hooke.

- The legislature has had an impact on the System's management. In 2006-07, the legislature moved the hire/fire authority from the Board of Trustees to the CIO, an example of implementing a best practice that demonstrated foresight. The legislature has a strong relationship with the Board and meets with its representatives on a regular basis. The Joint Oversight Committee on Pensions has used the annual review process to question the Board about its practices and suggest potential improvements based on what other states are doing, but none of the states mentioned in the Washington Post articles—New Jersey, New York, Nevada, North Carolina, and Pennsylvania—used legislation to enact their pension reforms.

I then asked Senator Peters and Delegate Jackson some direct questions:

Croatti: The other states you mentioned that didn't use legislation to enact their reforms instead saw major decisions made by their fund managers that Maryland's managers have so far not made, like cutting fees and switching to passively managed funds. Should the Maryland legislature make those changes if their System managers won't?

Senator Douglas J.J. Peters: What the legislature can do is monitor, provide input, perform “stress tests,” and 100 percent fund the System. We've done all that, a lot of work the past three years. People want safety; that's paramount for us, and that might mean less risky investments. Our retirees can't be left with an underfunded, bankrupt plan.

Delegate Michael Jackson: We are always monitoring the System and making sure it's properly funded. That's our job. The decisions are made by a Joint Oversight Committee. This is a coordinated effort. Some of the issues mentioned in the articles are not under our control but we see counsel constantly to see if legislative adjustments need to be made.

Peters: For example, counties had to take on 50 percent of the pension plan's state obligation in order to fully fund it. Getting the pension to within a percentage in line with other states was the goal because that made everyone comfortable. Maryland doesn't have the worst pension system, and it's not the best, but now we're on the right trajectory. Jeffrey Hooke needs to come to our meetings and engage in the process, and then if he has the same opinion, I'll understand.

Jackson: The meetings are also streamed.

We then spoke on the phone with Senator Adelaide Eckardt:

Croatti: Many states are engaging in some aspect of pension reform. In light of the issues raised in the Post articles, is Maryland doing enough?

Senator Adelaide Eckardt: We're doing the best with what we have to work with. The Supplemental Retirement System does real well, all the time, so why doesn't the main fund? Because the Supplemental Fund is contracted out. But the Maryland State Retirement and Pension System decided they wanted to hire their own people because the salaries were woefully inadequate to attract quality candidates. It's possible that if the pension fund was run like the Supplemental Fund it might do better because that fund is managed by Nationwide and has done well. Of course, when the stock market dips, everything goes down. But if you look at annual pension system returns, we go up and down, from 4 percent up to 10 percent.

Croatti: Why doesn't the legislature's Joint Oversight Committee on Pensions push for a pension system that adopts the successful strategies of the Supplemental Fund?

Eckardt: Because the jury's still out on whether all of the recent changes will, in fact, increase our investment return and our level of funding. Those are the two main factors: return on investment and the level of funding. Right now, the Maryland State Retirement and Pension System is 71 percent funded, up from 70 percent. So, we're only inching our way up to the next goal of 80 percent funded. Getting the funding stabilized has been an ongoing issue.

Eventually, with all of the new retirees coming, we'll need to get to 100 percent funded much faster than the very slow climb we've been seeing. We realized in 2011, the last time we made major adjustments, that we need to put more money away. How to do that is a never-ending battle. You need to talk to Senator Andrew Serafini; he does this for a living.

Croatti: You're the second person on the committee to say that.

Eckardt: Take my advice—don't submit your article without talking to him!

Senator Andrew Serafini has been in the financial services industry since 1985. He owns a financial services company in Hagerstown, the Serafini Financial Group. According to his website, he is a graduate of the College for Financial Planning and became a Certified Financial Planner™ practitioner in 1994. Also, a graduate of the Municipal Bond School of Chicago, he is an Accredited Investment Fiduciary® and "holds FINRA Series 7, 24, and 63 securities registrations as an Investment Adviser Representative of Commonwealth Financial Network®". We spoke on the phone:

"PEOPLE WANT SAFETY; THAT'S PARAMOUNT FOR US, AND THAT MIGHT MEAN LESS RISKY INVESTMENTS"

SENATOR DOUGLAS J.J. PETERS

Croatti: I was starting to get the sense that everyone on the legislature's Joint Oversight Committee on Pensions was going to take the Maryland State Retirement and Pension System's assessment over the criticism of Jeffrey Hooke, but then I spoke to Senator Eckardt, who suggested that reforming the pension fund's management might actually lead to an improvement in the performance of the investment return. What do you think?

Senator Andrew Serafini: I think I'm going to give you more financial information than you'll ever want to know.

Croatti: I have a 2,000-word maximum for this article.

Serafini: I'll bet you're already way over that.

Croatti: How did you know?

Serafini: Because you're talking to me last. This is my profession. I know how long explaining the details can take.

Croatti: Well, I was told by two members of the committee to make sure I talk to you, so maybe you can give me the summary version.

Serafini: I'll try. Maryland has what's called a Defined Benefit Pension or Defined Contribution (401c) between employer and employee. The System's health is tied to the risk of the market but managing both the risk and reward is the responsibility of the employer. The state has to kick in an annual amount if the fund doesn't have enough money for a particular year's retirees. In Maryland, if a teacher leaves the profession before they're vested, their money goes back into the System.

Croatti: How much time does it take to be vested?

Serafini: That was one of the reforms. Let's go back to 2000 when Parris Glendening was governor. The System was not only fully-funded, it was over-funded. Since the state didn't have to kick in anything extra that year, he gave away the excess funding as an enhanced benefit without maintaining that rate of funding. Maryland has not been in that position since; what Glendening did caused real problems. In 2011, when Martin O'Malley was governor, he tried to fix it. Employees went from a 5 percent paycheck contribution to 7 percent; vesting went from five to ten years. Adjusting the variables of the formula that Maryland uses to determine a retiree's payout resulted in a reduced benefit, which not only makes it harder to recruit and retain teachers and other jobs whose retirees the System funds, it goes against the state’s constitutional mandate to provide what we promised.

“THE BOTTOM LINE IS, WE ARE UNDERFUNDED AND UNDERPERFORMING—IT’S JUST A FACT”

Croatti: What about the reforms that Jeffrey Hooke has suggested?

Serafini: The Maryland State Retirement and Pension System doesn’t want an “aggressive,” volatile fund but we’ve missed out by not taking a more aggressive approach. We pay very high investment management fees, which take away the System’s return. There’s a competition nationwide to lower fees because they’re a drag on returns. Look, you either beat the S&P index or you don’t; it’s not a Republican issue or a Democratic one. Hiring more people in-house to manage the System for a lot less money could improve the System’s performance but it could also make things much worse. The bottom line is, we are underfunded and underperforming—it’s just a fact. Why? Is it the Board of Trustees? The professional managers? There are eleven separate systems managed in one pension pot. The state contributes a certain percentage of an employee’s contribution depending on the occupation. We provide 75 cents for every dollar a state police officer contributes, but only 20 cents for every dollar a teacher contributes.

Croatti: That’s shocking.

Serafini: It gets worse! According to the Trust Universe Comparison Service (TUCS), a pension plan analytical tool developed by Wilshire Associates, Maryland’s performance over the last ten years is in the 99th percentile out of 100, where the 1st percentile is the best. Some say if we were in only the 50th percentile, we’d be billions ahead.

Conclusion

It is amazing that there could be such a wide gulf of opinion on the performance of the Maryland State Retirement and Pension System. Dozens of states across the country and many countries all over the world have enacted some level of pension reform but the fear of enhanced risk is always present. Almost 40 years ago, Chile unveiled a “Mercedes Benz” model that replaced a pay-as-you-go plan (where current employees pay for each year’s retirees) with a new model where workers are mandated to save a percentage of their earnings, which are then invested in private funds. According to The Economist, “by many measures the system has been a success.” The investment returns fueled an economic boom that made Chile the richest country in South America. But now even Chile must consider major reforms because of discrepancies involving both the level and duration of contributions, the size of the payout to the average person, and an increase in life expectancy, among other factors.

No pension system, American or foreign, diversified or stabilized, actively or passively managed, can last forever without adjustments that correspond to identified weaknesses by recognized experts. Instead of looking at only the best performance variables or finding fault with specific criticisms, Maryland needs to collect all points of view on the health of the state’s Retirement and Pension System and then, if necessary, find a way to move forward, together, for the sake of their retirees.

We don't consider anything to be an "extra" at The Country School. Whether it's our creative arts program, two daily recesses, field trips, or outdoor education, each element of enrichment is woven into our students' experience at no additional cost to families. A safe, accepting, nurturing environment enables children to grow at a developmentally-appropriate pace, while maintaining a love of learning and being prepared for their next grade level. Life skills and study skills classes equip our 5th through 8th graders with the tools for high school and beyond, and daily conversations about positive peer relationships, decision-making, and healthy choices aim to keep our students as high on the wellness scale as possible throughout their lives. A focus on our 9 core values protects our students' childhood and informs their worldview so that we graduate not just smart kids, but great kids. Reach out and learn more about us!

RADCLIFFE CREEK SCHOOL

201 Talbot Blvd Suite A, Chestertown, MD 21620 | 410.778.8150 | radcliffecreekschool.org

Radcliffe Creek School is a coed independent school for students who learn differently. Radcliffe Creek School is located in Chestertown, MD and serves students from the Talbot, Kent, Queen Annes, Anne Arundel, and Caroline Counties in Maryland, as well as areas of Delaware. Radcliffe is committed to teaching using a strength-based approach where students are able to play an interactive role in their learning.

Mission: Radcliffe Creek School's mission is to empower children in a dynamic environment that celebrates unique learning. The School creates an environment where customized learning goes hand-in-hand with academic success and better self-awareness. Radcliffe Creek School believes that as each student develops a positive belief about oneself, he or she is able to engage in the learning process and therefore become an independent learner.

At the heart of our mission is finding ways to empower each and every student. At Radcliffe Creek School, our small class sizes and student-teacher connections allow for each student to have an individualized program that allows them to flourish. Students can take classes based on their skills and development versus their age. For example, some students participated in a pre-algebra class in the fifth grade while others may need explicit Orton Gillingham reading instruction as eighth-graders.

Leadership: Molly Judge founded Radcliffe Creek School over 24 years ago with the goal to create a learning environment where bright children, who learn differently, could succeed. The school has continued to thrive under a dedicated leadership and with the support from a committed group of staff, parents, grandparents, and friends. At the beginning of the 2018 school year, Meg Bamford became the Head of Radcliffe Creek School. She continues to build on the founding value to empower every student. Bamford deeply believes that "with a customized, strength-based approach, the trajectory of the life of each student changes. Radcliffe Creek School opens doors for children that may have otherwise been shut.

Wye River is a coed, independent high school serving bright students with learning differences such as ADHD, dyslexia, or anxiety. We are committed to affecting positive change in the lives of our students through an individualized, engaging, high school experience. At Wye River, often for the first time, students find a place where they can thrive not just survive in school.

Through the right balance of challenge, support and engagement, we prepare our students for college, career, and life. Our curriculum highlights real-life learning, collaborative problem-solving, and project-based learning, igniting an interest and a motivation in our teens. We address individual academic needs with research-based teaching strategies inclusive of Orton Gillingham and a specialized writing program that benefits any level of writer. A daily study-hall with an advisor helps every student develop skills in organization, time management, effective studying, and self-advocacy.

Our program ensures a well-rounded experience involving students in athletics, art, theater, technology, and music. All students begin each day with morning sports and exercise - improving students' energy and focus throughout the day. We find a high percentage of our students possess musical and visual-spatial talents. Through a myriad of electives, we foster these creative strengths.

At Wye River, we intentionally cultivate a caring culture. Qualities we consistently see in our students include - intelligence, creativity, resilience, originality, humor, and compassion. Wye River teachers and staff are amazed at our students' capacity for empathy and personal growth. To see first hand what our community is all about, we invite interested families to contact us and schedule a personal tour.

NEXT GENERATION EDUCATION

By Jonathan Yates

HOW UNIFIED SPORTS, ROBOTICS, AND E-SPORTS HIGH SCHOOL PRO-GRAMS ARE DEVELOPING THE NEXT GENERATION OF STUDENT ACHIEVERS

Maryland State Senator Ed Reilly (R-33) may have a background in selling insurance, but he buys into the future of education being increasingly high-tech, based on his interactions with the Power Hawks Robotics program at South River High School in Edgewater.

Reilly represents parts of Anne Arundel County in the Maryland General Assembly, and South River High School is in his district. Like any dedicated public service official, Reilly is focused on engaging with the educational system in the state and how it prepares Maryland students for the careers and skills that will be in demand tomorrow. This includes working closely with local schools and educators. “I have seen the robotics club grow from an interest in drones to a competitive club, which has shown itself to be one of the best in the state,” Reilly says. “Great students, great parents, and great coordinators. A stellar group of student scientists and engineers. I am very proud of them and look forward to seeing them shine even more in the future.”

The Power Hawks Robotics program is just one example of how Anne Arundel County schools are leading state efforts to mainstream Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics (STEM) initiatives into the curriculum. Thanks to the work of elected officials, teachers, coaches, and others in education, Anne Arundel County is also moving forward with two more very unique initiatives—the Unified Sports program and E-Sports. All three education initiatives are viewed by state leaders as instrumental to advancing student education and, in turn, local industry and careers.

A UNIFIED MISSION

The Unified Sports program is, perhaps, the most inspiring offspring ever of a lawsuit, and is the work of the Maryland General Assembly.

As a result of one bold parent suing the state for their special needs child to have access to physical education, so as to participate fully in school, the Maryland Fitness and Athletics Equity for Students with Disability Law was passed in 2008 by the Maryland General Assembly. That led to the creation of the Unified Sports programs at local high schools. In Unified Sports, special-needs students pair with neurotypical students to compete in bowling, tennis, and bocce ball. The results have exceeded all of the expectations one would have for this in terms of public policy developing to serve the common good.

Patrick Oot, a partner with the international law firm of Shook Hardy Bacon, has a leading electronic discovery practice that has lent itself to developing E-Sports. He is bullish on this region for gaming growth. “Anne Arundel County is perfect for building a premier E-Sports program from the ground up, which is critical for engendering wide-spread support,” he says. “It is [an affluent county], with the state capital in Annapolis and a robust high-tech community, thanks to the presence of the NSA.”

ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY IS PERFECT FOR BUILDING A PREMIER E-SPORTS PROGRAM FROM THE GROUND UP, WHICH IS CRITICAL FOR ENGENDERING WIDE-SPREAD SUPPORT. IT IS [AN AFFLUENT COUNTY], WITH THE STATE CAPITAL IN ANNAPOLIS AND A ROBUST HIGH-TECH COMMUNITY, THANKS TO THE PRESENCE OF THE NSA.”

For those jaundiced about today’s teenagers, go watch them walk hand-in-hand with their special-needs partner to the Unified Sports athletic events, as I did for an afternoon practice at Southern High School. You’ll quickly realize that compassion and inclusivity does exist among high schoolers. These commendable character traits start with leadership, and there are few more motivated and more inspiring individuals than Caprice West, who runs the Unified Sports program at Southern High School, and Michelle Skinner, who does the same at South River. The stated goal of Unified Sports is to “...create opportunities that lead to improved sports skills, higher self-esteem, equal status among peers, and new friendships.” It is not only reaching those goals, but exceeding them by inspiring neurotypical students to select majors in college that lead to careers in special education.

From her post, West has seen what the Unified Sports program brings to a school, especially its student-athletes. There have been many welcome, yet unexpected, phenomena from the program. Chief among these, parents are stunned to see how compassionate their suburban teenagers are in their interactions with their special-needs partners. This leads to more participation from those at home. “The parents of the partners get so involved, as they are pleasantly surprised to see that their children are so nice,” West says happily.

THE HOTTEST SPORT IN TOWN?

E-Sports, which is competitive video gaming, is booming. Worldwide, the number of players is growing by the millions, with the revenue registered in the billions. And it, like Unified Sports, sees special-needs competitors as equals. One of the many great things about E-Sports is that those on the Autism Spectrum, for example, can and often do excel in E-Sports, as it requires a concentrated ability to focus.

As a result of favoring the unique skill set that many on the Spectrum possess, E-Sports develops star athletes on the international stage, both neurotypical and special-needs.

Oot further suggests, “While it is true that E-Sports is growing, it still lacks cohesion and direction. “But,” he points out, “that presents an opportunity for Anne Arundel County [and others in the state] to create a strong framework, as it has in other areas with its signature school programs. Designating a school as an E-Sports signature school, along with making it a varsity sport is an easy, logical, low-cost step that will help local E-Sport student-athletes earn college scholarships!”

BRINGING IT ALL TOGETHER

Thanks to the presence of Federal government agencies, most notably NSA and NASA in the area, there is a local abundance of high-tech talent, featuring world-class engineers and computer scientists. The government, at every level, has done its part in helping to prepare Maryland students for careers in the future workforce, which will be more technical.

Public initiatives are working in the state, based on recent national rankings. Nine public high schools in Maryland were rated among the best for STEM programs by U.S. News & World Report. These schools are located across the state. Introducing an E-Sports presence to augment their programs could enhance student achievement and school rankings.

Long a leader in producing top student-athletes, Maryland and, specifically, Anne Arundel County, schools are now at the vanguard for turning out “Digital Deion Sanders” thanks to E-Sports, robotics, and Unified Sports programs.

Deion Sanders was one of those few gifted athletes, who could play several sports at the major league level. Anne Arundel County could soon be producing these uniquely talented student-athletes, who would excel at both traditional sports, along with a supremacy in computer games. E-Sports could aggrandize many school departments similar to how traditional athletic teams do so. A responsible athletics department does much to make the student, the school, and surrounding community stronger. So, too, would a robust E-Sports program, but more so within the STEM arena. This framework could better prepare student-athletes for careers after graduation.

To achieve this, Maryland high schools should include E-Sports in the Unified Sports program. After this is accomplished, take E-Sports from the province of the athletic department to be part of the Signature, Magnet, and STEM offerings at Maryland schools. The new Crofton High School could be a natural fit for an E-Sports Signature program, as many parents who work at NSA, NASA, et al live in this community. Both E-Sports and robotics should be considered as varsity sports, too. The benefits will far outweigh the expenses.

An ancillary benefit of offering computer activities to students through robotics and E-Sports is the leveling of income inequality at the local level. Maryland already performs well in preventing income inequality among all states, ranking 11th in the nation. This can be improved by increasing student access to computers at school, especially to those that do not have at access at home. “Digital inequality” is a tremendous problem in the United States, as students with a computer and access to the Internet at home perform better in school and in their careers, according to research by the U.S. Department of Housing & Urban Development (HUD). As just one example, the Universal College Application is completed through a computer, along with the needed documents, such as transcripts and letters of recommendation. A supportive, conducive STEM environment with computer-based sporting activities such as “Minecraft” and “Fortnite”—two games that many teenagers, no matter how affluent the family, already enjoy playing—could enhance student achievement. Imagine evolving E-Sports into an organized school program with rewards that could include a college scholarship or entering the path toward a rewarding career.

SUCCESS ON THE HORIZON

In what is unquestionably her proudest statement as an educator about the Unified Sports program in Maryland, Southern High School’s West boasts, “I think this is the first generation that does not see disabilities.”

Credit for that abounds thanks to Unified Sports. This is seen in robotics programs as well, and could, one day soon, in E-Sports. Educators at local schools, like Southern and South River, not only share the vision, but work hard to implement the critical detail work that make each program successful.

Last November, in what was one of the first events of its kind in Anne Arundel County, Annapolis cluster students from Bates Middle and Annapolis Middle squared off in an E-sports competition held at Maryland Hall in Annapolis. The event was presented by the office of Mayor Gavin Buckley and EliteGamingLIVE, the premiere K–12 E-sports league.

Leaders in their fields, like Reilly, Oot, West, Skinner, Buckley, and others envision major gains for Anne Arundel County students and Marylanders statewide with the implementation of such events and programs. Further effort to build on their blossoming success could lead to higher student achievement, lower rates of income inequality, and enhanced community/career engagement.

2020 PRIVATE SCHOOL GUIDE

Welcome to your 2020 Private School Guide! Choosing a private school for your child and your family's wants and needs requires considerable time and research. Like last year, the format of the guide allows you to easily navigate local private schools' vital information (tuition, student/teacher ratios, key contacts, etc.) and efficiently learn about their education philosophies, affiliations, student clubs, extracurricular programs, sports offerings, and more.

Please note: This information is up to date as of our print deadline. Because some schools have varying data points, you will see "N/A" (Not Applicable) for several schools' categories that do not apply. The Performance/Creative Arts Offerings, Extracurricular Clubs, and Interscholastic Sports categories also have varying data references because some schools have a specific number of programs, while other schools vary year to year. If you have questions or concerns, please contact the school directly.

HOW TO PICK THE RIGHT

Summer CAMP

FOR YOUR CHILD

BY AMANDA VU

If you're looking to enroll your child in summer camp this year, you've got company. Over 14 million children and adults in the U.S. go to a summer camp every year, and there are more than 14,000 operating camps in the U.S. alone, according to the American Camp Association (ACA). A summer tradition in many households, summer camps offer children and teens unique opportunities to reconnect with nature, meet potential life-long friends, and engage in activities that promote independence, teamwork, and problem-solving. Searching for the right summer camp best suited for your child can certainly be a daunting task, but the process can be an enriching learning process for both the parent and child. Here are some helpful tips and advice so you can confidently enroll your child in a summer camp they won't forget.

1 START EARLY: According to the ACA, 44 percent of summer camps reported that their enrollment numbers were the highest they've been in the last five years. Starting the camp search early and registering in advance can secure your child a place in the decreasing number of available slots. It also gives your child more flexibility in picking options, since they won't have to worry about camps filling to capacity. Keep in mind that most camps start the application and enrollment process in the winter and spring. Another benefit to registering early can be the multiple session/family discounts, financial assistance, or the most common, "Early Bird Discount," that parents can use to save money. The ACA reports that 61 percent of camp discounts in 2015 came from registering early. Remember to complete applications and return them by their due dates. Whether it be having the flexibility to choose from different options, decreased financial cost, or peace of mind, registering your child early for summer camps is the way to go.

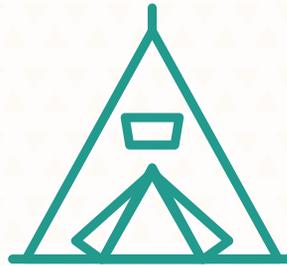

2 GET TO KNOW YOUR CHILD: Before even researching any camps, have an open, honest conversation with your child about their interests. You might find that a program they liked last year no longer excites them anymore, or vice versa. Fortunately, the sheer number and variety of camps offered will tailor to most every child's niche. Other questions to ask your child may be, "What have you always wanted to do but never got the chance to?" and "Who do you want to surround yourself with?" Ultimately, your child will be the one participating in the summer camp, and you'll want to make sure they are looking forward to attending it. Although getting your child's opinion is essential, remember to maintain a balance between their opinions and yours. The skills you want your child to practice are equally important to their hobbies and interests, and you may have greater insight on their strengths and weaknesses than they do. Just like a puzzle, these key components will all come together to help you and your child decide on the right summer camp.

3 KNOW YOUR OPTIONS: You can be assured that there is likely a camp that fits your criteria and your child's interests. Besides using local resources—like What's Up? Media's Summer Camp Guide (appearing in our February issues) and online guides such as findacacamps.org—to research camps, you can also check if local museums, recreational centers, schools, and places of worship offer unique camp experiences. With a multitude of options available, it can be hard to narrow them down and commit to one. This is where the last step, or the completed puzzle, comes in handy. Take into consideration your child's interests and first determine the type of camp you want your child to attend. Does your child have a specific sport they want to hone their skills in? A specialty sports camp may be a good option. Do you want your child to spend their day outdoors engaging with nature? Consider recreational/outdoor camps. Secondly, consider the duration and location of the camp. If your child can handle being away from home for a long period of time, an overnight camp can be great; if not, a day camp can offer the same enriching experiences, but with the comfort of returning home. Location depends on your preferences as a parent and how comfortable you are with their level of independence. Thirdly, make sure that it offers the accommodations that your child needs, such as specific medical assistance or dietary options. Safety is key when sending your child away from home. Lastly, but most importantly, consider the cost and the financial assistance available. Make sure you are financially stable enough to take on the cost of sending your child to camp. If not, consider alternative financing solutions (start a GoFundMe page) or registering early to help lower the cost.

4 VISIT THE CAMP: Camps can look great on paper or on their website but can render sub-par in reality. Visiting a camp is ultimately the best way to break down the barriers and get a feel for what the camp will actually be like for your child. Before going, have an idea of their credibility; that is, the staff retention, reviews, and notable awards and honors. A tool worth using is the Camp Program Quality Assessment (CPQA) Short Form, published by the ACA to assess a potential camp. On it, you can document all the necessary information you feel is a factor in the decision. If you are able to observe the camp in action, keenly watch how the staff treats the children, and if the overall environment is positive and accepting. Are they attentive and closely involved during activities? Do the campers feel safe to express their opinions and concerns? Are the activities engaging? If you can't visit, make time to contact the staff for an informative Q&A. Consider the camp's physical, emotional, and environmental aspects. The main question you should be asking is, "Will my child feel comfortable learning the beneficial skill sets that this camp has to offer?" Keep your child's criteria in mind and create a scale on which you rate the camps you have visited or contacted. This will make your decision in the end much easier. Finally, consult with your child to make a choice and register for the program.

5 PREPARE YOUR CHILD FOR CAMP: The last piece in this puzzle is making sure that your child is prepared and ready to go to camp, especially if it is an overnight camp away from home. This depends on a multitude of factors, from comfort level to social and communication skills. Ask yourself, "Does my child have positive experiences away from home?" If the answer is no, take time to practice these skills with your child. Whether it be encouraging them to have sleepovers away from home, positively reinforcing acts of independence, or encouraging good hygiene and neighborly social skills, you can teach your child to become more self-sufficient and comfortable with a camp lifestyle. It's totally normal for your child to still be nervous about going to camp. In fact, summer camps are supposed to help children overcome these fears and should provide a safe space for them to do so. According to the ACA, 74 percent of children said they were afraid of doing at first. Fostering a positive attitude towards summer camp will make your child excited for summer camp and the critical life-long lessons it has to offer.

DISAPPEARING ACT

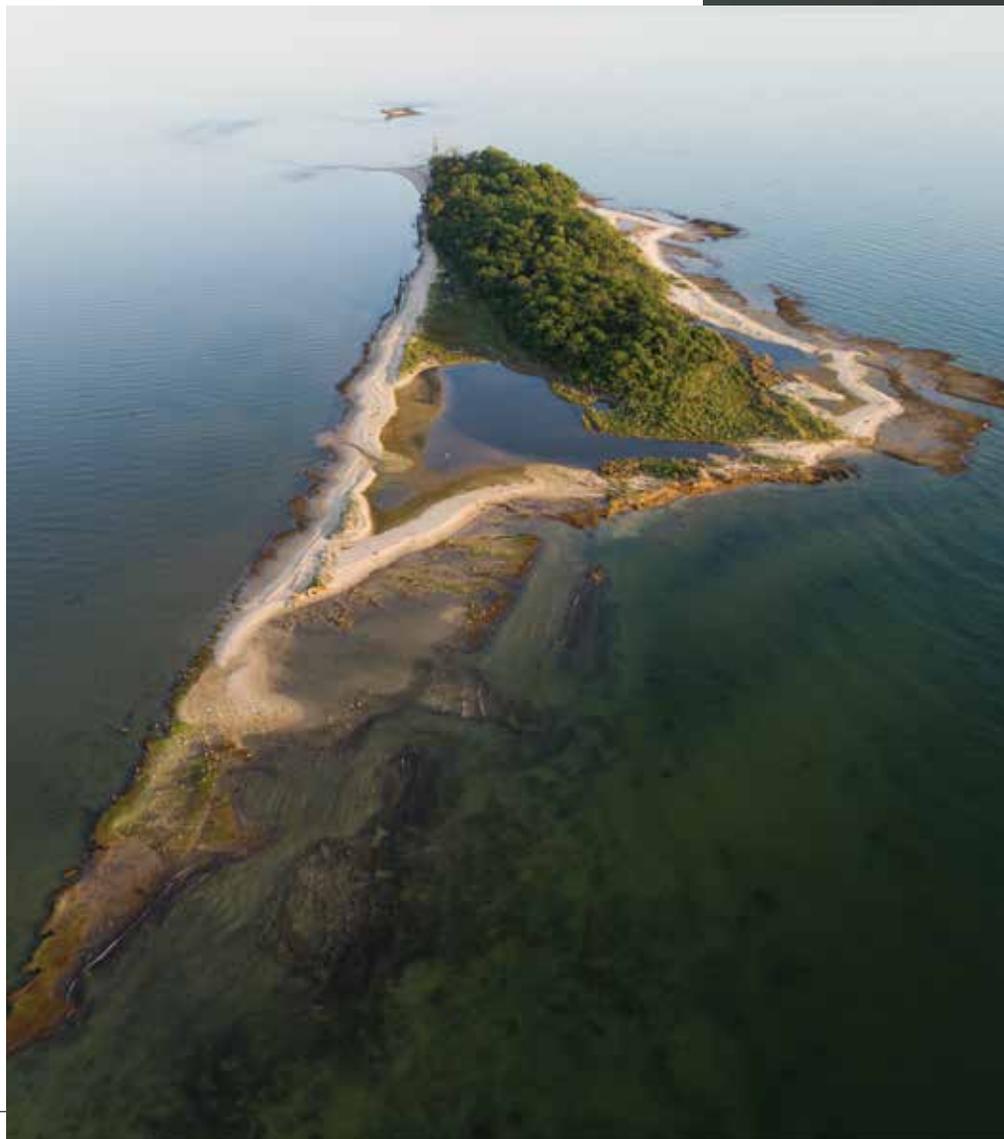

MANY OF THE CHESAPEAKE BAY'S ISLANDS, SOME LARGE, OTHERS SMALL, ARE INCREASINGLY SUSCEPTIBLE TO CHANGING TIDAL CONDITIONS—CAN WE SAVE THEM?

BY DIANA LOVE | PHOTOGRAPHY BY JAY FLEMING

In September 2019, Hurricane Dorian slammed into the Bahamas, wreaking mass destruction and rendering portions of the island chain uninhabitable. That same month, students around the world spoke out against the climate crisis, many skipping school in unity with teen activist Greta Thunberg and the Global Climate Strike. The strike was intended to coincide with the United Nations Climate Action Summit, wherein UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres hoped to mobilize countries from around the world to fight global warming.

In October 2019, the City of Annapolis experienced unusually high tides from a tropical storm off the mid-Atlantic coast that caused an early close to the U.S. Sailboat Show. That same month, The Chesapeake Bay Foundation announced the closure of Fox Island Environmental Education Center, citing sea level rise, erosion, and dramatic loss of protective salt marshes around the facility.

Climate change is not new news. Neither are strikes or calls for legislative action. But in a time when unpredictable superstorms of unprecedented strength, encroaching floods, and massive pollution threaten common plants, wildlife, human infrastructure, and, indeed, the way we live, the call to address climate change has never been more real.

Scientists refer to the Mid-Atlantic and especially the Chesapeake Bay as ground zero for a real-time model of how climate change will impact human life in the next 30 to 100 years. Warming oceans, a result of excess heat trapped by greenhouse gases, and the melting of polar ice, along with erosion caused by drought and stronger, more destructive storms, are predicted to cause sea level in the Chesapeake to rise not to the tune of just millimeters, but of feet.

The Scientific and Technical Working Group of the Maryland Commission on Climate Change says in their recent report, "Updating Maryland's Sea Level Rise Projections," that Maryland residents should plan for the state's coastal waters to rise by 2.1 feet by the year 2050 and by 3.7 feet or more by the Century's end. A synopsis of the report states that the forecast of a 3.7-foot increase by 2100 represents the working group's best estimate; it is in the middle of the projected range (2.1 to 5.7 feet).

Scientists at the Chesapeake Bay Foundation (CBF) confirmed the working group's report. "Sea level rise is exacerbated by land subsidence," CBF wrote on their website in an announcement of a 2019 Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. "This combination of processes has resulted in approximately one foot of net sea-level rise in the Chesapeake Bay over the past 100 years—a rate nearly twice that of the global historic average. According to some scientists, the region might see as much as a three- to four-foot sea level rise this century." Captain Enil Petruncio, U.S. Navy, Retired, is the former chair of the Naval Academy's Oceanography Department and a founding member of the Navy's Sea Level Rise Advisory Council. He says, in general, sea level is occurring around the globe but that the Chesapeake Bay will be hit especially hard. "In the Mid-Atlantic, we have a double whammy, because the ground here is sinking, called subsidence. We have episodic erosion caused by wave action, a steady rate of subsidence and accelerating sea level rise."

Why do climate change and its role in sea level rise matter? For the City of Annapolis, it means the historic downtown and City Dock area could see more and worse flooding. Annapolis experienced 63 high-tide floods in 2017, compared to about four in the early 1960s. A 2018 National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration report showed that the 12 sunny day floods Annapolis experienced in 2018 were as many as in all of the 34 previous years combined. Rising waters threaten buildings, city infrastructure, storm drains, septic and sewage systems, and customer traffic and tourism dollars. Petruncio says that high-tide flooding events that impact the Naval Academy often come from southerly winds acting on the bay, which can send about a foot of water up into the basin and over academy seawalls. "We see on average about 20 floods, but in 2018 there were about 40 such events at the Naval Academy. A recent article in the Capital Gazette noted that the Academy may have to consider moving to a location on higher ground. The Maryland Department of the Environment estimates that an increase of 3.7 feet also could inundate large parts of Baltimore's Inner Harbor.

Away from Annapolis, rising waters threaten Maryland's beautiful islands. Millimeter by millimeter, foot by foot, the islands of the Chesapeake Bay—including Tangier, Smith, Holland, Sharps, and Fox, among others—are disappearing or already gone. Marshland is migrating, fish and wildlife species are disappearing, and native plants—indeed, entire forests—are dying. Human infrastructure—homes, schools, businesses, cemeteries, churches, and communities—are falling into the sea that surrounds them.

Jay Fleming is a noted Annapolis area photographer who's made the Chesapeake Bay both his passion and his inspiration. His book Working the Water, published in 2018, showcases the men and women from small island communities who make their living from crabs, oysters, fish, and the ancillary businesses that operate alongside the Bay's seafood industries.

the 1970s but by 1985 had become a wreck beneath the water. On Holland Island, rising water in the late-1910s forced townspeople to move their houses by barge to the mainland. Holland survived until 2010, when the last structure, a settler's home, washed away under rising tides.

If scientific models predicting sea level rise of two feet by 2050 and three or more by 2100 are correct, Deal Island and most of Tangier Island, both of which currently sit on sand bars about five feet or less above sea level, will disappear as well. The Army Corps of Engineers estimates

Fleming, who works from his studio in Maryland Hall in Annapolis, is at work on another book, an expansion of the first, that focuses especially on Smith and Tangier Islands. Both islands are facing the omnipresent impact of climate change, sea-level rise, and land subsidence. Effectively, these islands are disappearing in the space of a generation. "What's unique about these islands is that they are the only two [populated] offshore islands in the Chesapeake Bay," Fleming says. "This book will be about how that isolation has shaped the communities."

A recent glimpse at some of the photos that will be used in the book are notable for their visual rendering of sea-level rise at work—shots of children riding bikes through floodwaters, of sandbars where marsh grasses once flourish, and of gravestones washed over by waves. A large cross, once a landmark for navigators and visitors, now sits in standing water at high tide, visually reminiscent of Noah watching as his lands vanish in the Biblical flood.

It's important to note that while Fleming focuses on the two habitable islands with working communities left on the bay, the Chesapeake used to be full of small rural communities living on numerous islands. Most of these are long gone.

In his seminal book The Disappearing Islands of the Chesapeake Bay, Johns Hopkins oceanographer William Cronin documented a survey of more than 40 islands that have disappeared. Cronin's historical and scientific tour outlines erosion, loss of marshland, and fragile communities the islands supported for generations. His book contains photos of Barren Island, where a sizable hunting lodge housed guests as late as that some 3,300 acres of Smith Island eroded over the last 150 years. Currently, only 900 acres of the island are habitable.

“To understand rapid sea-level rise anywhere in the world, stand among the scraggly, dying pines of Dorchester County along the Maryland coast,” writes Moises Velasquez-Manoff, a New York Times contributor, in his article “As Sea Levels Rise So Do Ghost Forests.” Velasquez-Manoff’s reporting describes a process that is unfolding in real-time: as sea level rises, saltwater moves in, killing first oak and other sensitive hardwoods, then loblolly pine, and eventually sweet gum. Saltwater marsh plants move in, as do impenetrable stands of Phragmites, an invasive plant. Saltwater seeps into the groundwater, polluting aquifers, killing corn and soybean fields, and rendering entire tracts of land agriculturally useless.

Saltwater incursion alone doesn’t destroy island life. Sea level rise and erosion bring visible changes to island topography that impact economies and communities: beaches move or disappear, marshes get wider, while marine channels also get wider, move, or disappear. With these tangible changes come significant human welfare concerns: the destruction of piers, jetties, and wharves; damage to homes, boats, and equipment; loss of jobs; and entire towns subsumed by the sea.

Case in point is Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge, near Cambridge, Maryland. Blackwater reportedly lost 3,000 acres of forest and agricultural land between 1938 and 2006. More than 5,000 acres of marsh became open water.

Open water might be useful for kayakers and bird watchers, but it’s not ideal for the small communities that line the back roads of Dorchester County’s waterfront. In towns like Smithville, Velasquez-Manoff writes, “backyards have been gobbled up by advancing marsh, basketball courts overgrown. What were once thick stands of pine near the water’s edge have greatly thinned. The marsh now menaces a historic graveyard.”

So, what can be done about climate change, the havoc caused by rising sea levels, and the disappearance of islands in the Chesapeake? Not much says Doug Myers, Maryland Senior Scientist at the Chesapeake Bay Foundation's Phillip Merrill Environmental Center in Annapolis. "It's hard to stress enough that it's the future that will suffer from what we do right now," Myers says. Myers and other scientists say that climate studies show sea-level rise and climate change can't be reversed or even really impacted at all through at least 2050. "Even if we took action right now, there is a time delay in the results of reducing or removing carbon emissions, a time lag in the response of the ocean and the atmosphere so sea level will keep rising. We can impact how much sea level rise goes up this century but we are not going to change what happens through 2050," Petrucio says. After that 2050 date, climate change can be, if not stamped out, at least successfully addressed if abating greenhouse gas emissions becomes a global priority.

For change to occur 30 years in the future, action needs to start now.

Myers says legislators need to think about what policies they are willing to take a political hit for in the short term, in order to impact the future. "There will be certain adaptations we will be forced to make in our lifetime based on climate change being already baked into the system, and I hope politicians realize that engaging in global and local efforts to reduce greenhouse gas emissions is an important thing to do."

erosion, much less the costs of repair after major storms. Mitigation efforts on Smith and Tangier alone have required the investment of millions of dollars from Federal, State, and local coffers. Legislators and politically active communities determine the fate of our disappearing islands not by reducing greenhouse gases or by staging strikes and summits, but by constructing breakwaters, jetties, seawalls, and stormwater valves. They hope these feats of engineering might soften the blow to what is inevitable: human vulnerability to the elements.

The questions for residents of Maryland and Virginia who pay for these projects with their taxes become as much financial as environmental: how much will we pay for sea-level rise? How will we pay to save the disappearing islands of the Chesapeake?

Many folks look at the disappearing islands of the Chesapeake and still deny the role that climate change might have in sea level rise. They point to the contracting nature of the bay, a geological occurrence resulting from compression by a sheet of ice during the last Ice Age. Some say the Chesapeake basin is sinking, bringing the land closer to the water at the same time that the water is rising to meet it. Others point to the natural weather cycle of the planet; their position is that global warming is a natural and inevitable phenomenon. Finally, climate change naysayers point to the nearly rockless, silty nature of the Chesapeake itself to claim erosion is causing islands to sink into the bay.

The question of whether our disappearing islands are a result of climate change accelerated by human behavior or by natural processes is moot to the people who live there. They're working tirelessly in their local communities, in the state legislature, and up to the White House to keep the last bits of beach, dock, and home, that they can. At risk are the time, talent, and treasure—the blood, sweat, and tears—that colonists, settlers, and inhabitants have invested over centuries in island communities that could be lost, gone forever.

Oceanographers and climate scientists aren't politicians or economists, so they aren't called upon to factor in the costs of adapting to sea level rise, migrating marshes, persistent flooding or visible

EXPLORING YOUR PREMIUM KITCHEN OPTIONS

By Lisa J. Gotto

The custom kitchen—for many homeowners there is no other option. A custom kitchen provides a homeowner with the opportunity to move beyond cookie cutter and inject aspects of their own personality into the most popular room in the home. This is especially true when it comes to appliances, which many times serve as a focal point of the room where everyone loves to gather.

Several manufacturers have realized there is a niche in the market somewhere between custom and big box retail. GE Appliance was one of the first. They introduced their Café line of appliances in 2018 in response to this and their customers' ongoing need for customization; creating a new category in the process, the "premium kitchen." More than a trend, customization is everything today's consumers want and now seems perpetually intertwined with customer satisfaction.

IT'S ALL ABOUT COLOR, MATERIAL, AND FINISH

After many years in which consumers were offered only stainless steel as a high-end look for appliances, a level of gray burnout occurred. Fresh appliance options were suddenly offered in brushed bronze, brushed copper, brushed stainless, and brushed black hardware, combined with luxury matte finishes. This is seen as an appliance marketplace disruptor.

Going beyond stainless steel to set a "premium" tone in the kitchen with luxury matte finishes has broadened what can be done from the design standpoint significantly. While stainless steel remains popular for those who choose to create a look with cabinetry and/or fixtures, the option for a sleek matte finish from your refrigerator right down to your microwave oven is what "wow factor" looks like in many millennial homes.

The arrival of these new appliance options also coincides quite nicely with a key designer trend, mixing metals. This trend could become as influential and enduring as the pop of color trend has been in décor. The freedom to mix elements of brass, copper, silver and bronze tone, and matte gold is being widely embraced and has opened up a new way of thinking about your kitchen's hardware. Handles, knobs, and drawer pulls are being seen as stylish accessories with designers creating palettes that work together to bring warmth to the room, lend interest, and even make a statement.

MORE IN STORE

Other well-known manufacturers seem to be responding to the consumer demand for more than stainless by offering a few extra color and finish options, as well. Maytag has added a Cast Iron Black finish that creates a matte look to their stainless appliances and KitchenAid and Frigidaire are offering a sleek version of black stainless steel.

Samsung has recently introduced what it calls the Tuscan Stainless Steel Kitchen. While it is described as a neutral look for the kitchen because the finish has the unique ability to blend or offset many cabinetry choices, its tone appears to be a deep bronze hue with just a hint of plum, thus inspiring the Tuscan nomenclature.

With trends like personalization and customization on the rise as we head into the 2020s, we can expect more options from premium kitchen retailers as they seek to please the ever-demanding custom-minded consumer.

Tidying Your Garden of Books

By Janice F. Booth

“A BOOK IS A GARDEN CARRIED IN YOUR POCKET.”
(ANCIENT CHINESE ADAGE)

There were 675 million print books sold in the United States in 2018, according to the Pew Research Center. Does it sometimes feel as though a good portion of those books ended up on your nightstand, coffee table, and desk? I’m sure my piles of books account for some hefty percentage of those 675 million.

It’s well and truly winter now, no gardening projects beckoning you out-of-doors, the perfect season for curling up with a good book. But perhaps finding the pile or shelf or box in which you carefully deposited that good book has slipped your mind. A cold January afternoon might be just the time to tackle those random piles of books, to put them in some logical and attractive order. Which leads me to the subject of this column, which you may already have guessed—organizing your home library.

THERE ARE THREE MAIN ISSUES TO CONSIDER WHEN TRYING TO ORGANIZE ANYTHING IN OUR HOMES:

1. What’s to be organized.
2. How best to organize.
3. Where to locate or relocate this beautifully organized stuff, be it garden tools, sports equipment, or books.

Looking around at my library, I can identify the traditional print material—books, newspapers, and magazines. But I’ve also got to consider my e-reader, PC, earphones, and charging cables. What will be the most useful way for me to find a particular book or periodical, or the earbuds for my iPad? How do I use this wealth of material? Let me suggest several ways of organizing a personal library:

USE: One collection might be the books, periodicals, and electronics that are useful on a daily basis. Another group might be the material for book clubs or courses. A third group could be favorites, books never to be loaned or parted with. And, what about grouping together material for my hobbies—gardening, sky diving, spelunking? (I’m a bit of a Walter Mitty.) There’s that guilt-inducing pile of “read it again” books, too. Could we put together all the books and magazines that come highly recommended but have yet to actually be read—that “next thing to read” group.

2 GENRE: Of course, there's always the traditional organization by genre. (This one works best if your reading tastes are wide ranging.) You'll have your mystery and espionage collection, sci-fi books, romance, travel, biography and memoirs, etc. If you really have a lot of time on your hands, you could even categorize your collection by the Dewey Decimal or Library of Congress systems.

3 APPEARANCE: This one's for those of you who want your library to please the eye as well as the mind. You can arrange your books by hardcover and paperback, size—small paperbacks to oversized coffee table books. You might be very bold and group your books by the colors of their spines or covers—all the red covers, the blue ones, the black spines. Even the width of the book could be a determinant—novellas separate from their pushy cousins, the sagas and tomes. (There's a certain advantage here. I find my little 100+ page books sometimes slide in between two 500+ pagers, never to be found again!) Within your color-coded collections, you could categorize the books alphabetically by author, title, or subject.

Now that you have a plan, don't panic. Stick with me here! Choose one of those out-of-control bookshelves or piles of books and begin placing the volumes in boxes based on the categories you're using. If you're really enjoying this project, you might want to download one of the free or modestly priced apps for cataloging your books. Librarything.com is free, and easy to use. Goodreads.com is another popular cataloging tool. These apps usually provide a method for entering the ISBN number of the book, and the computer fills-in the rest—title, author, publication date, etc. Cataloging your books is particularly helpful if you have an extensive library and perhaps some valuable books. You might provide your insurance agent with a copy of the catalog as you would for a collection of jewelry or fine art.

While you're sorting through those random books, transforming them into a useful and handsome library, begin thinking about the housing of your freshly organized library. Where do you want to locate some or all of your books? Do you have a room designated as the library, den, or office? Are there some blank walls that would happily support bookcases or shelves? How about that funny space beneath the staircase? Or that long hallway wasting precious space? Maybe you'll want to locate parts of your library in different areas; cookbooks and foodie reads on some shelving in the kitchen, humor and joke books in the powder room, travel books in the guestroom. I have a friend who organized his books chronologically, based on when he'd read or bought the book. So, he had his collection of comics and children's books in the front hall; the romance and adventure collection reposed on the landing; and his collection of classics held pride of place in the den.

When you're thinking of the where and how of your physical library, keep in mind the practical issues:

4 SAFETY: Ideally, tall bookcases make the best use of space, but they need to be secured to the wall to avoid toppling. In addition, you'll want to think about how you'll get to the books on the upper shelves; will you need a step stool or ladder? This is the point when you may want to call on the services of a carpenter. Whether you want built-in bookcases or less permanent bookshelves, they will need to be sturdy enough not to bow or collapse under the weight of your book collection. Equally important will be ensuring that the books won't come tumbling down on top of some unsuspecting passer-by. And check that the placement of your bookshelves won't block heating or cooling vents. A professional fix-it person or carpenter can ensure that your books are housed in safe and attractive cases and shelves. Don't leave it to chance.

5 LIGHTING: If you are going to use your shelved books, you'll have to be able to read the spines; see the titles. How will the areas you choose for bookshelves be lit? Too much light can damage the books' covers and binding. You'll also want to think about lights for reading in or near your library. Will it be feasible to plug in a floor lamp? Will you want to bring in an electrician to install some track lighting or additional electrical outlets?

6 FURNISHING: You'll probably want to add some seating to your library, a comfy easy chair, a bench for quick reads, a table for your cup of tea, as well as that lamp casting light over your shoulder and onto the page.

7 SPECIAL TOUCHES: If you're inspired, you might want to toy with the décor in and around your library. Perhaps you have seen the clever bookshelves made of old stepladders and weathered boards. Or, you may have a collection of bobble heads or Wedgwood china that would be lovely displayed on some of the shelves between the books. You might find a geode to use as a bookend, or some handsome, antique bookends to prop up your books. If your library is in a multi-purpose room, say the dining room or the TV room, you could install drapes in front of the bookshelves; you could draw the curtain and transform the room.

8 HOUSEKEEPING TIPS: Finally, when settling your reorganized books and periodicals into their new location, think ahead to the day-to-day maintenance of your library. If your home tends to be damp, you may need to install a dehumidifier to protect the books from moisture which can lead to damaged covers and pages, as well as mold. If your library is in a dry area, a humidifier may be necessary, but I caution against overdoing the humidity.

Finally, if you collect used and antique books, they may come with their own collection of silverfish, book lice, termites, or cockroaches. To prevent such an infestation of your books, when you get a suspicious book, seal it in a zip bag and pop it in the freezer for a couple of days. That will kill anything living among the pages.

As educator and politician Horace Mann noted, "A house without books is like a room without windows." You'll enjoy those books more when you have your collection under control and easily accessible.

Cook's Hope Village Charmer

By Lisa J. Gotto

Five-thousand square feet of living space is featured in this exceptionally well-planned home that offers everything a homeowner could want, plus a convenient location close to everything. Situated in the premier community of Cook's Hope, this home offers just a five-minute drive to Oxford Road in Easton.

A traditional generous living room with a wood-burning fireplace greets guests on the first floor, as does a separate dining room and well-equipped, eat-in kitchen with cozy breakfast nook, powder room, and pantry. The first floor also includes the convenience and long-term livability of a spacious master bedroom suite with lovely pastoral views and a large walk-in closet.

There's plenty of room for a growing family or guests upstairs with two spacious bedrooms that boast their own bathrooms. The upper floor features a bonus room over the garage that can be used as an extra bedroom, game room, or home office.

“My buyers were already homeowners in Cook’s Hope; they just love it there. They were just looking for a more private property and a larger house,” said agent Cornelia Heckenbach.

This Talbot County home offers plenty of storage space on all levels, including a two-car garage with room for tons of recreational gear. With this home’s easy access to the waters of Peachblossom Creek off the Tred Avon River, and miles of walking paths through the woods, the new homeowners may need such a space to stow bikes, kayaks, tennis rackets, etc.

The exquisitely planned community of Cook’s Hope also offers tennis courts, a community gym, and acres of open space accented with ponds and picnic pavilions—truly, an idyllic way to spend every day on Maryland’s scenic Eastern Shore.

Fairbanks Heritage Home

By Lisa J. Gotto

This St. Michael's charmer built in 1908 is a wonderful example of the type of asymmetrical dwelling built in the town during the Victorian era. Exceptionally well kept and perpetually updated, this home was the treasure of one family for nearly 40 years prior to sale and offered numerous advantages for the new homeowners, including a two-car garage, which is virtually unheard of in St. Michael's. The location of the home on one of the premier streets in town added to the property's desirability, as did its one-block proximity to waterside restaurants and town dock, according to the listing agent, Cornelia C. Heckenbach, who also represented the buyers who purchased the home.

Historically known as the Walter H. Fairbanks House, the farmhouse rockers on the front porch make the perfect perch to people-watch and once inside, the home offers many visual treats. Old-world details such as high ceilings, crown molding, and three period fireplaces mingle brilliantly with new world amenities such as a family room off the kitchen, a cozy breakfast area, and central air conditioning. An abundance of natural light is afforded by the home's front facing Bay window and a pair of large Victorian sash front porch windows accentuating the interior glow of its amber-colored hardwood floors.

Along with the home's spacious master with walk-in closet, there are two additional bedrooms and two-and-a-half bathrooms. Above the two-car garage is a partially finished space ready to become an in-home office, guest apartment, or studio. The third floor also offers the potential for future living space. This exceptional historic property was listed on April 16th, 2019 and was closed on August 23rd, 2019.

LIGHTING THE WAY TO HEALTHY MINDS

APRIL 25, 2020 • 6:00 PM – 11:30 PM

Please Join Our Growing List of Generous Sponsors and Donors

Together with your support, we will light the way to healthy minds by advancing our region's mental health and addiction care services and facilities.

Inpatient and outpatient mental health resources in our region are severely limited. While some outpatient resources are available, they aren't growing at the pace needed. There are less than 200 mental healthcare inpatient beds in the region, resulting in the transfer of dozens of residents to programs outside of the area, and even outside of the state, for treatment every month.

With your generous support, funds raised from Denim & Diamonds will help us to expand healthcare for all who need it, as well as advance outpatient and inpatient addiction programs and services.

COULD HOT YOGA BE A HELP FOR MDD?

MDD, or Major Depressive Disorder, is a chronic and non-remitting form of depression that transcends the emotional experiences of sadness, loss, and changing moods. It is said to affect about 15 percent of the adult population at some point of their lives and has, thus far, been unresponsive to many traditional treatments for depression.

That is a why a study currently underway at Massachusetts General Hospital (MGH) is being seen as critical toward advancing treatment. MDD is a leading cause of disability issues with significant socioeconomic implications worldwide.

The study intends to follow 30 adults from age 18 to 80—who are in otherwise good general health but who experience significant symptoms of MDD—through the practice of Bikram yoga, a type of hot Hatha yoga. This yoga is typically practiced in a room heated to 105 to 110 degrees with about 40 percent humidity. Using standardized dialogue, it will take participants through 26 sequenced postures, which are performed in the same order during every 90-minute class.

Maren Nyer, PhD, is the director of Yoga Research in MGH's Depression Clinical and Research Program. "Hot yoga, practiced by a growing number of people, appears to be a promising treatment for depression," she says, citing that its regular practice may regulate certain physiological functions that could contribute to the reversal of a depressed state.

The eight-week program has been designed to test the safety, effectiveness, and tolerability of Bikram yoga compared to a control group of waitlisted participants. The study will examine the effects on a participants' depression, quality of life, functioning, and the common physiological markers associated with depression. These include inflammation, autonomic arousal, and stress hormones.

Researchers are hopeful that results bear out a positive outcome so they will have a new treatment for a condition that has, thus far, been frustrating and challenging to treat.

"This is an important study," says David Mischoulon, MD, PhD, director of Research of the MGH Depression Clinical and Research Program. "If hot yoga proves to be effective, it would be an excellent and safe treatment option for people who have not benefited from regular antidepressants, cannot tolerate their side effects, or choose not to take them."

TRENDING SLEEP AID

Toss. Turn. Repeat. If this is your nightly routine, you have probably tried just about everything from melatonin to warm milk to lavender to get relief. Have you tried a weighted blanket yet?

The weighted blanket has been used medically for some time as a way to administer therapy for children with autism or to calm behavioral disturbances in children. This methodology has been compared to work in the same way as swaddling does for a baby at sleep time by making the infant feel more secure and comforted. This is also known as a sensory activity that associates sleep with a particular calming object, like a teddy bear, or a practice, such as aromatherapy.

These blankets are becoming more popular for use among adults as our society continues to struggle with getting a good night's sleep. (One in four people develop insomnia every year.)

As a result, companies who manufacture these blankets have noticed a definite uptick in sales over the last two-year period. Their popularity is increasing, in part, due to their holistic approach to insomnia with no doctors' visits and no drugs required.

Weighted blankets look much like regular blankets, but are filled with plastic beads or pellets to make them heavier, weighing anywhere from three to 20 pounds. For the best results, manufacturers recommend using your body weight as a guide, so you should select one that weighs approximately 10 percent of your total body weight.

So, do they work? Unfortunately, blind studies on their use are not possible because participants can easily tell if a blanket is heavy or not.

If you wish to try the trend be prepared to dig deeper than the cost of the lavender spray, as they cost anywhere from $100 to $200, and while some users claim they work wonders, most user satisfaction data varies widely.

When it comes to sleep, however, most sufferers would be willing to pay just about anything for a good night's worth.

POTENTIAL GOOD NEWS FOR WOMEN REGARDING COGNITIVE DECLINE

Researchers are encouraged by the results of a recent clinical study of 2,000 post-menopausal women. The study, which recently appeared in the North American Menopause Society (NAMS) journal, followed women over a 12-year period, analyzed the link between levels of estrogen and cognitive decline. The study took into account the women's reproductive history, the number of years that had passed between their first period and menopause, number of pregnancies, how long the women had breastfed, and if they had ever used hormone replacement therapy, and, if yes, for how long.

The study concluded that estrogen exposure is linked to better cognitive health in older women. The benefits were also found to be stronger for the oldest women in the sample, who started taking estrogen the earliest.

"Although the assessment of the risk-to-benefit balance of hormone therapy use is complicated and must be individualized, this study provides additional evidence for beneficial cognitive effects of hormone therapy, particularly when initiated early after menopause," stated Dr. Stephanie Faubion, the medical director of the NAMS.

Fresh Take

MEYER LEMONS

By Lisa J. Gotto

So, it's the middle of winter and that means many of our favorite fresh fruits are harder to come by. You don't have to forego all the wonderful sources of vitamin C this time of year, however, as Meyer lemons are currently in season. "What's the difference between a regular lemon and a Meyer?" you may ask. Meyer lemons are somewhat sweeter than their standard counterpart, so they contain more sugar, but less acid, making them taste milder and not as tart as regular lemons. As a result, they work exceptionally well in many entrée- and dessert-based recipes. Our advice is to grab a few and whip up this recipe—Zesty Glazed Lemon Pound Cake—to add a little sunshine to an ordinary winter day.

Zesty Glazed Lemon Pound Cake

INGREDIENTS

1/2 Tbsp. butter to grease pan
 1 1/2 cups all-purpose flour, plus a little more to dust pan
 1/2 tsp baking powder
 1/4 tsp baking soda
 1/4 tsp kosher or sea salt
 3/4 cup sugar
 2 Meyer lemons, zested
 1/4 cup, softened, unsalted butter
 1 large egg
 1/4 tsp pure vanilla extract
 1/4 cup plain fat-free yogurt
 3/4 cup low-fat buttermilk

INGREDIENTS FOR GLAZE

1/2 cup sifted confectioners' sugar
 1 Tbsp Meyer lemon juice
 1/2 tsp Meyer lemon zest

DIRECTIONS

Preheat oven to 350°F. Coat an 8 x 4-inch loaf pan with butter, dust the inside with flour, tapping to remove excess flour. Line the bottom of the pan with parchment paper and butter and dust that with flour, as well. Tap out excess flour. You can substitute non-stick spray for the butter, if desired. Set pan aside. Using a whisk, blend flour, baking powder, baking soda, and salt in a medium-sized bowl. Set aside. Place lemon zest and sugar in a food processor and pulse for 30 seconds. Beat butter and lemon sugar mixture in a large mixing bowl at medium speed until mixture is light and fluffy. Beat in egg and vanilla. Combine yogurt and buttermilk in a small bowl. Begin to add 1/2 the flour mixture at low speed just to combine with the ingredients in the large mixing bowl. Then add the yogurt and buttermilk to this. Finish by adding the rest of the flour mixture and continue on low speed until batter is smooth. Add to prepared pan, smoothing the top and tapping the pan on counter top to dislodge any air bubbles in batter. Place in the middle of centered rack in oven and bake for 60 minutes. Insert toothpick upon removal to ensure the cake is baked through. Cool pan on a wire rack for 10 minutes and then remove to a wire rack to complete cooling. To make glaze, combine sifted confectioners' sugar in a bowl with lemon zest. Add the lemon juice and whisk all ingredients together. Drizzle mixture back and forth across width of completely cooled cake. Let set before serving. Storing suggestion: Keep in an air-tight container for up to 3 days in refrigerator.

A Decade's in the Making!

20 TIPS FOR A HEALTHY NEW YEAR

By Lisa J. Gotto

2020 has arrived! Can you believe it? A fresh, new decade is upon us and to make the most of it you are going to want to feel and be your healthy best. To help in that effort we have compiled a list of 20 things you can do right now to improve your quality of life into the decade ahead.

STOP VAPING. If the reports of hundreds of vaping-related illnesses and deaths haven't been enough to sufficiently scare you, the fact that we won't know what the long-term consequences of this practice will be, should. Needless to say, if cigarette smoking remains your vice of choice—QUIT!

ADD PLANTS TO YOUR HOME. The medicinal, environmental, and practical purposes alone make this a no-brainer. Make this the decade you start healing with natural plants like aloe vera, improve your home's environment by enhancing air quality with plants, and get cooking with fresh herbs that you have grown in container or outdoor gardens.

GET YOUR HOME TESTED FOR LEAD, MOLD, ASBESTOS, AND RADON.

The air that we breathe is paramount. The presence of any of these elements in your home can severely affect your health. You can even perform some of these tests yourself, and websites like healthfinder.gov can also help your find resources for testing.

TRY A CEREBRAL WAY OF WORKING OUT: QI GONG. Steeped in the centuries-old Chinese philosophy of combining movement of the body and the innerworkings of the mind, this practice of coordinated movements is used in combination with breath work and meditation to increase stamina, improve balance, and enhance circulation.

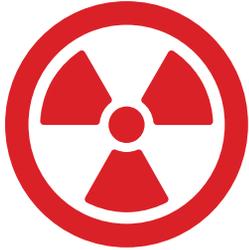

REMOVE PESTICIDES FROM YOUR HOME. By focusing on prevention, you can deter many common household insects like ants, roaches, and flying insects from getting into your home, bypassing the need for pesticides altogether. Simple rules like, "Don't leave dirty dishes in the sink or anywhere else in the home," is a good place to start. Yes, teenagers, we're looking at you! Clean up all food residue after dining or preparing food. Just one jam-smearing knife left on a counter, can enlist an army of ants to infiltrate your kitchen. Be sure to keep food packages and storage containers tightly closed and check to make sure any dubious cracks or entry points to your home are properly sealed so the crawling and insects flying insect stay outside where they belong.

REDUCE YOUR USE OF TEFLON. Pans with Teflon and other non-stick coatings contain Perfluorinated chemicals, or PFCs, which over time, can accumulate in the body. While there is currently nothing linking their use to cancer cases, the FDA does say there is a known human carcinogen among those chemicals and recommends discretion when using these types of pans.

SWAP OUT YOUR TOXINS AT HOME. Cleaning your home is never fun and depending on what you're using to clean it can be dangerous to your health, as well. Swap the chemically-based toxic agents found in store-bought cleaners for more natural agents: vinegar instead of bleach; use hydrogen peroxide as a stain fighter; baking soda to clean tub and tile grout; and borax to control mold. Combining diluted lemon juice with vinegar is also a great window cleaner!

MAKE A COMMITMENT TO REDUCE YOUR SCREEN TIME. By now, there have been enough studies that show that too much screen time on mobile and other devices can lead to sleep problems, relationship issues, and psychological and social disorders. Start by taking your kids' cell phones at dinner and silence your own. Practice the art of conversation with them.

ENGAGE YOUR BRAIN MORE.

It's not just about retaining your memory anymore. Engaging the brain so it is more agile can produce many benefits. An agile mind helps one elevate their experiences and live more resilient and happy lives. So how does one create mental agility? Changing things up in small ways can help. Taking a vacation or even a coffee break sometimes is enough to create a mind shift. Learn something new. Novelty aids mental flexibility and the act of learning contributes to brain growth. Purposeful spontaneity and being more mindful about words you use and how they can affect you is also useful. Substitute unnecessary negative words and phrases for ones that will better serve you.

FORGIVE SOMEONE. It is true that holding onto something that has hurt you in the past will continue to affect you in the future if it remains unresolved. While this is often not an easy process, the health benefits are worth making the effort. Experts say that people who can forgive exhibit lower levels of depression, anxiety, and hostility. They are also less likely to suffer from substance abuse, have higher self-esteem, and generally are more satisfied with life.

ENGAGE A PEN PAL. While the Internet has provided us with an array of cool communication tools over the last two decades, it has also flooded our inboxes with copious emails we never even open and has us banging into doors or worse, because we're trying to walk and text. Find one friend to strike up a letter-writing relationship with this year and get excited about opening your real mailbox again.

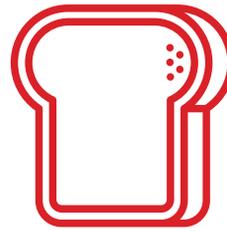

MAKE AN INVESTMENT IN YOUR EMOTIONAL HEALTH. Visit our website at whatsupmag.com for 6 key needs to improve emotional health.

BUY A BICYCLE. And when you ride it, take some time to remember what this first real taste of personal freedom and conveyance felt like when you were a kid.

RECOGNIZE/REDUCE YOUR SALT INTAKE. Take a look at any processed food you are eating for its sodium count. Just a few of these foods per day can easily tip you over the recommended daily limit of 2,300 milligrams of salt per day. Restaurant meals are also notorious for high sodium content, so diner beware! Too much salt can lead to high blood pressure, belly bloat, and down the road, it can lead to an increased risk of heart attack, stroke, kidney disease, and dementia. A good rule of thumb if you're watching your salt is not to add any extra to meals or recipes, buy low-sodium options whenever possible, and eat more whole foods.

LEARN TO BAKE BREAD, MAKE ICE CREAM, OR GROW A VEGETABLE FROM SCRATCH THIS YEAR. The satisfaction gleaned from this process alone might surprise you especially if you share the experience with family members and make a project of it. An added benefit? You know exactly where your food came from.

BECOME A MENTOR OR MENTEE. There is so much to be gained from these special relationships. While mentors are helping mentees to build self-esteem, provide career support, and explore best practices, mentees enable mentors to further identify and achieve their career goals, enhance confidence, and gain perspective on their own personal development. Once made, these bonds are often ones that are maintained for the long-term, as well, and it's always beneficial to know you have someone in your career corner.

COLLECT RAINWATER AND USE IT TO WATER YOUR NEW INDOOR PLANTS. This is pretty much self-explanatory; everyone and everything benefits, and it is one of the most basic of recycling practices.

SEE YOUR PHYSICIAN ABOUT ANY MAINTENANCE DRUGS YOU MAY BE ON.

Ensure that you actually still need to be taking the medications you're on, or see if you could perhaps be taking a smaller dose. While our physicians may write the scripts, our health is ultimately in our hands.

THROW OUT ANY ZANTAC OR ITS EQUIVALENT YOU HAVE IN YOUR HOME. In September of 2019, the FDA announced that there is an ingredient in the common heartburn drug, ranitidine, that can cause stomach cancer. It's a good idea to do a bathroom cabinet sweep to toss out any expired OTC meds at this time of year, as well.

ALLOW YOURSELF TO REMEMBER AND FEEL JOY. Spreading joy is not a bad idea either. That will help make this a happier New Year for sure!

Sarcopenia, Part 2

WHAT YOU CAN DO RIGHT NOW TO MINIMIZE MUSCLE LOSS

By Lisa J. Gotto

Last month, we examined what sarcopenia is and what researchers are currently working on in the lab that may be the basis for alternative treatments and preventative therapies in the future. (Check whatsupmag.com for this article, if you missed it.)

Fortunately, we do know that when exercise and activity is continued on a regular, ongoing basis as we age, we can help mitigate significant muscle loss and decrease the possibility of the early onset of symptoms.

There are several tell-tale signs that sarcopenia is setting in and three basic forms of exercise you can employ to combat the condition.

SIGNS MUSCLE STRENGTH IS DIMINISHING

1. Feeling physically weaker over time. If carrying groceries, taking out the garbage, or carting the wash basket to the laundry room is getting tougher to do, that is a good indication that you are losing muscle 2. Showing less interest in being active 3. Reaching exhaustion quicker when doing an activity 4. Losing weight without trying to 5. Walking slower

If you are experiencing any of these symptoms, let your doctor know. He or she can help assess where you are on the muscle-loss spectrum and suggest the types of exercise that will work best for you considering your current health status and medical history.

3 WAYS TO FIGHT BACK

Losing muscle does not have to be a done deal. Remember the saying “strength in numbers.” Find a friend to work out with or get to a class or two each week. It’s also a good idea to seek the advice of a qualified fitness trainer who can make sure you are doing the exercises correctly and with proper body alignment.

RESISTANCE TRAINING

It’s time to use the force of gravity to get those muscles contracting, which is the basis for resistance training. This contraction is accomplished through external resistance using your own body weight, universal and free weights, or exercise bands. Examples of traditional exercises with weights include bicep curls, bench presses, shoulder presses, and kettlebell swings. Push-ups, planks, chin-ups, and sit-ups are examples of resistance training without weights.

If you can commit to three sessions per week, you should start noticing improvement around the 12-week mark.

FITNESS TRAINING

Adding some fitness training, or sustained exercises that raise your heart rate, to your routine can also help keep sarcopenia in check. Enhanced results have been cited when aerobic activity is used in combination with resistance and flexibility training. Benefits were reportedly gained when the aerobic activity, such as running, cycling, or hiking, was initially added just 15 minutes a day, five days a week, with the most muscle-sustaining and enhancing benefits seen after increasing the aerobic activity to 45-minutes per session.

WALKING

Just put one foot in front of the other—and keep on going! This simple activity can help prevent and even reverse muscle loss. One study of more than 200 people in Japan aged 65 and over, found that muscle mass increased after six months of daily walking. Results were particularly notable in participants who were diagnosed with low muscle mass. So, grab your walking sneakers, find a scenic route, and get started. Aim to add 10 minutes to your route at regular intervals as your endurance builds and enjoy the benefits that maintaining muscle mass provides well into your future.

Exhibitions

On Land and On Sea: A Century of Women in the Rosenfeld Collection

Chesapeake Bay Maritime Museum; Through March 1; Free for CBMM members, $6-15 for non-members; Cbmm.org; 410-745-2916 On Land and On Sea: A Century of Women in the Rosenfeld Collection features the work of Morris and Stanley Rosenfeld, who created the world's largest and most significant collection of maritime photography. The iconic photos featured in this exhibition are recognizable to the general public and are treasured by boating enthusiasts. On Land and On Sea reveals the social and historical context of women over the better part of the 20th century through the lenses of the Rosenfelds' cameras.

Bodyphones and Jiwa dan Raga

Academy Art Museum; Through May 31; $3 for non-members, free for children under 12; Academyartmuseum.org; 410-822-2787 The Academy Art Museum presents Bodyphones and Jiwa dan Raga, immersive installations by Aaron Taylor Kuffner (1975). The Gamelatron Project exposes us to the rich and profound nature of resonance and its effect on the psyche. It strives to create harmony in the tension of fusing the east and the west, the modern and the ancient. The Gamelatron's contrasting materials and mechanisms tell us a story of globalization and modernization.

Annual Members' Show

Dorchester Center for the Arts; January 7-25; Free; Dorchesterarts.org; 410-228-7782 Annual juried show for DCA member artwork. This year's exhibition will also include a W. Robert Tolley Retrospective, which will highlight the work of one of DCA's late founders.

Where's Wilma?

FIND WILMA AND WIN!

New year, new decade! Ring in 2020 with Wilma as she takes you through What's Up? magazine's first edition of the new year. Read up on how climate change is affecting the Eastern Shore in "Disappearing Act." Be sure to peruse the Private School Guide and check out "Out on the Towne" for some fun events. Let's make 2020 a great year!

Here's how the contest works: Wilma appears next to three different ads in this magazine. When you spot her, write the names of the ads and their page numbers on the entry form online or mail in the form below and you'll be eligible to win. Only one entry per family. Good luck and don't forget to submit your restaurant review online at whatsupmag.com/promotions for another opportunity to win a prize.

Congratulations to this month's winner: Beverly Nickerson of Chestertown who won a gift certificate to Fisherman's Crab Deck!

Mail entries to: Where's Wilma? Eastern Shore, 201 Defense Hwy., Ste. 203, Annapolis, MD 21401 or fill out the form at whatsupmag.com/promotions

of Caring

Where the health of the Eastern Shore comes first

Understanding the unique health needs of our communities is our business. At University of Maryland Shore Regional Health, we make sure the health care you need is right here, close to home. Our network of physicians and providers work side by side with University of Maryland School of Medicine specialists to bring a higher level of expertise directly to the communities we serve across the Eastern Shore. When you see a Shore Regional Health sign, it's our promise to create healthier communities together. You don't need to travel far for advanced care with a personal touch. It's here in your own backyard, as it has been for more than a century.
